Prior denies secret talks with Sinn Fein

From Richard Ford, Belfast

Mr James Prior, the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland denied yesterday that any civil servants at the Northern Ireland Office were involved in secret talks with leading members of the Provisional IRA's political wing, Sinn Fein.

Mr Prior threatened to dismiss any officials immediately if he discovered they had taken part in informal discussions with Sinn Fein and said a report in The Sunday Times was absolutely untrue.

He added: "There is no truth in this story whatsoever. If I knew of any official at that level who was talking to them, I. would sack them immediately. No one is talking to Provisional Sinn Fein about political mat-

But speaking from his home in Britain. Mr Prior admitted that low-level officials in areas such as social services and health had contacts with elected representatives of Provisional Sinn Fein on purely constituency matters. Mr Prior's policy is that he will not meet members of Sinn Fein until they drop their policy of armed struggle".

The report in The Sunday Times claimed that officials from the Northern Ireland Office's political department had met the Sinn Fein leaders, Mr Gerry Adams, Mr Danny Morrison, Mr Joe Austin and Mr Martin McGuinness. It said at least one meeting had been ter, yesterday accused the city's held in a house in Andersons-

Only one minister has met Sinn Fein representative, Mr Gerry Adams, and that was when he was part of a delegation to Stormont shortly after being elected as Assembly member for West Belfast.

But the Government could not sever all contact particularly in relation to Sinn Fein carrying out constituency business in areas dealing with health, social security and housing.

In the republic, Dr Garret FitzGerald's Cabinet is divided over the ban on meeting with Sinn Fein members imposed last February, particularly as the leader of the Local Government and Public Services' Union, negotiations with government ministers, is a vice-president of the Provisional IRA's political

The Government's ban has already led to ministers refusing to see delegations of local councillors until Sinn Fein members withdrew.

A bitter dispute is looming in the Carmarthen constituency which could damage the image of Labour party unity being carefully nurtured by Mr Neil Kinnock and his Shadow Cabinet colleagues.

Dr Thomas took his decision last March after his conviction on an importuning offence. But since then he has been one of the most politically active of all the Welsh MPs.

His decision to resign was delivered in a statement to the party's general management committee. Mr Edwards said: "Dr Thomas reaffirmed that decision at a meeting of the constituency executive and as far as we were concerned that was the end of the matter."

Dr Thomas has decided to reconsider his decision because of the strong measure of support and sympathy he has received

By Hugh Clayton The National Society for Clean Air protested yesterday that the Government's strawinadequate. On the eve of a new official drive for careful burning by farmers, it said a complete ban was needed. The Government is relying on council by laws to avoid repetition of last year's incidents in which thick smoke dangerously obscured visibility

The by-laws forbid burning on weekends, Bank holidays and in darkness. But they do not operate until adopted by councils, and some, including Salisbury. refused to stop burning.

The grain harvest has begun and the dry undergrowth in much of Britain has increased the risk of straw fires spreading. "By-laws have consistently failed in the past to deal with the air pollution generated by straw and stubble-burning", the society said. The new by-laws are much tougher than former controls, but they are also more complicated and may prove totally unworkable in practice. "What happens will depend on the weather. If it is hot and dry, the smoke will hang around, gradually intensifying as more and more fields are

Naturalists seek EEC help to protect geese

Naturalists have appealed over the heads of the British Government for EEC help in safeguarding one of the main surviving haunts of a very rare type of "laughing" geese (Hugh Clayton writes). The Royal Society for the Protection of Birds fears that government permission for peat extraction on the island of Islay in Scotland, poses a serious threat to the survival of the birds.

The society has appealed to the EEC Commission to apply a directive which requires member governments to protect the geese, known as Greenland White-fronted Geese.

A message to Sealink customers from British Ferries Ltd.

Senior officials of the National Union of Seamen and the National Union of Railwaymen have met with the new owners of Sealink UK Ltd. and will convey to their National Executives the results of these discussions. Based on undertakings given by the new owners, both unions wish to inform the travelling public and road hauliers that no further industrial action over the issue of privatisation of Sealink UK will be recommended to their members. Furthermore, in the interest of assuring users of Sealink UK ships of regularity and dependability of service, so they may book their holidays and passages without fear of delay the unions will recommend to their members that no industrial action be taken which would cause disruption to Sealink UK services and not at the same time to those of competitors.

This announcement is made by British Ferries Ltd. on behalf of its subsidiary, Sealink UK Ltd., and on behalf of the National Union of Seamen and the National Union of Railwaymen.

An impression of the completed Albert Dock redevelopment in Liverpool Dockland gets £17m new look

When 30 tall ships from the Transatiantic and Enropean Tall Ships' Races enter Albert Dock, Liverpool, in the the early hours of this morning, it will mark the successful completion of the £17m first phase redevelopment of Bri-tain's largest group of Grade I listed buildings.

Merseyside Development Corporation and Albert Dock Company part of the Arrowcroft Group, are pumping £100m into a five year scheme to give the dock a new lease of life as a business and tourist centre which is attracting interest from around the world. Begun shortly before 1841 and opened by the Prince Consort in July, 1845, Albert Dock was the work of Jesse Hartley, the master engineer. The five-storey warehouses built entirely of brick and iron timber was excluded as a fire hazard - enclose the dock on famous Maritime Museum four sides. It is likely the design was influenced by St Katharine's Dock in London, begun in 1827 by the architect, Philip Hardwick.

But the warehouses had a very short working life and what was hailed as a wonder of the maritime world and one of the finest set pieces of industrial architecture anywhere was allowed to decay for nearly half a century. It finally closed in Last September the huge urban renewal project got under way to transform the buildings into 360,000 sq ft of shops, 250,000 sq ft of museums, 460,000 sq ft of offices and 120 flats on the 27-acre site, which includes parking space for 2,000 cars. The basin, reclaimed at a cost of about £12m will be the vessels preserved by Liverpool's whose new headquarters opened last week in the northern block. The Albert Pierhead build-ing, including the piermaster's house, has been restored and the Hartley Bridge renovated at the entrance to the basin.

There are plans for the northern Tate Gallery in a later phase, as well as workshops, centres, pubs, wine bars and restaurants. Granada Television is setting up an electronic news gathering centre in the former dock traffic office.

Mr Michael Franklin, of the architects, Franklin Stafford partnership, has carried out the refurbishment and alterations in sympathy with the original buildings, cleaning the brick-work by sandblasting, installing new windows and quarry-filed

P&O. Mr Douglas Sutherland, a soi-disant English gentleman whom indigence has compelled to write a series of slim guidebooks to the habitat of the nearly important, says in his latest volume published today that the upper-class English-man through the ages has been motivated to travel abroad, not by the lure of cultural enrichment, but by hanky-panky.

"My heart bleeds for those who have never known a tropic neral experience that it is as stupid to take your mistress abroad as it would be to take a bottle of wine to a restaurant which charges excessively high prices for corkage."

Deprives of shipboard romance, what the English gentleman fears most is to have to make conversation with the nouveau riche.

Such a danger is particularly prevalent with airlines, who marshal all their passengers as hour before the flight is due to leave then refuse to be the leave, then refuse to let them aboard until the last minute.

The legalization of

Frente Amplio sparked off street celebrations and demonstrations by its supporters over the weekend, and even poli-ticians of rival parties praised

In addition the military's concessions have accomplished their stated aim, which was to convince civilian politicians to sit down at the negotiating table. On Thursday formal negotiations began between the military and the traditional Colorado Party led by Sedor Julio Sangainetti, the Frente Amplio and the smaller Civic Union.

In the talks the Government will seek the parties' agreement to a series of constitutional reforms restricting political freedoms and giving the military a formal role in the civilian government that is to take power next year. Military leaders have hinted that without such an agreement th elections could be called off. But the biggest question is the political fate of the leader of the other main traditional party, Senor Wilson Ferreira Aldmate, the candidate of the Blanco party. He remains in jail six weeks after he was arrested when he returned from exile. The best efforts of his supporters to press the Government to release him have failed. Señor Ferreira is often said

Señor Sanguinetti: Formal

A bitter power struggle between the Home office and rebel councils about civil defence is frustrating action to make the councils carry out government plans. By tomorrow county councils required to have sent completed questionnaires to the Home Office saying what they have done to implement government regulations introduced on December 1.

Passive resistance to the regulations is being led by the Greater London Council. An official of the Nuclear Free Zone authorities secretariat told The Times that all 29 county councils in the secretariat believed there could be no civi defence against nuclear attack and their replies to the questionnaires would reflect that.

The clash between the Home Office and rebel councils opens up a second front to the battle being waged between the Government and local authorities about rate-capping and the abolition of the metropolitan counties and the GLC.

The GLC refuses to budge in its opposition to "any form of civil defence in a state which has nuclear weapons". It accepts that it has a duty to carry out obligations imposed by the Government. But in its replies to the questionaire, it blames the Government for not being able to do more.

In particular, the GLC wants far more detailed planning assumptions by the Home Office on type of attack London can expect.

To comply with the regulations, the GLC intends to spend £475,000 on a commission of inquiry to be called Greater London Area War Risk Study. It will examine what would happen if there were a war, whether conventional, chemical, biological or nuclear.

The commission is expected to see how government proposals for civil defence measure up to a range of possible options. Thus the Home Office questionnaire will be answered with a counter barrage.

The Home Office has refused grant aid for the study, it is publishing guidance on plan-ning assumptions. That guidance, expected soon, is likely to into more detail than tion campaign as a watchdog with no teeth, the newlyelected assembly has waited no longer than its first session payment of Britain's £457m rebate for 1983.

The action shows all the signs of having been taken in a fit of pique. Under the terms of the Fontainebleau summit agreement, the Parliament will never again have power over the rebates granted to Britain. The 1983 rebate is its last chance of controlling the way the money is spent.

The vote last Friday to freeze the rebate was apparently intended to blackmail Britain into agreeing a sup-plementary budget for the Community this year. But had those who voted so enthusiastically thought for a moment about the present British Government's record they would have realised that in freezing the rebate they were guaranteeing that no sup-plementary budget could ever

The immediate reaction by Britain was to stick to its opposition to a budget that would spend more than EEC rules permit, whatever the Parliament did. In its view the whole basis of the Fontaineblean agreement would be at risk if it gave way.

The agreement was a straight trade-off. In return for a guaranteed reduction in its net contribution to the Community, Britain agreed to ask the Commons to permit an increase in the Com-munity's income. Every other member state had to ask similar permission, but only in the Commons was the result

Just as these negotiations are getting under way in earnest, budget ministers have been asked to approve extra agriculture money for this year. The Commission, other European Parliament all consider that this is a special case; that the money in question need only be advanced until the Community's income increases, and that holding back spending on agreed policies now will damage the progress of the Community.

Dark Ages London moved west By Norman Hammond Archaeology Correspondent

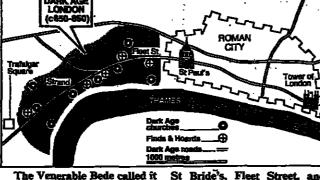

What happened to London after the Romans left Britain 1,500 years ago? How did the walled city of Londinium between the Tower and St Paul's metamorphose into the thriving medieval city that greeted William the Conqueror, and what went on in the obscure centuries of the Dark Ages in between?

The problem has bedevilled archaeologists, because of the extreme paucity of finds from the area of ancient Londinium, which have suggested to some scholars that the capital was to serted.

A new theory suggests that while the walled enclave may have had a very small population, London itself carried on, in an area just to the west of Fleet Street and the Strand. Professor Martin Biddle, of Christ Church, Oxford, says in the latest issue of Popular Archaeology that there are many references to London as a commercial and ecclesiastical centre in the seventh and

The bishopric was founded in AD 604, there was a mint, and overall, Professor Biddle con-cindes that the documentary evidence for "a major inter-national trading centre at London in the seventh to minth centuries" exceeds that for any contemporary English town. Since the city was not, apparently, within the Roman walls, but was close enough to be called London, he argues that it must have lain on the well-

Israeli censor angers Arabs

From Christopher Walker Jerusalem

Between 15 and 30 per cent of all the material submitted to the Israeli military censor by Palestinian newspapers in annexed East Jerusalem is banned from publication.

This is a finding of a new study of the relationship between the Arab press and the Israeli censor by a leading Israeli journalist. Mr Danny Rubenstein, Arabic affairs reporter for the left-wing Tel-Aviv daily Davar. A detailed report of his study appears in the National Federation of Israeli Journalists 1984 Yearbook.

The report appears as controversy is growing about Israeli censorship, not only of newspapers but also of books and other art forms in East Jerusa-lem and the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

In recent months, Palestinian journalists have repeatedly complained that items which have appeared in the Israeli or foreign press have been excised by the censor from their own

According to Mr Rubenstein, the East Jerusalem newspapers are aware that large portions of the material they submit for censorship are likely to be removed, so they regularly prepare about 25 per cent more than they have space for, it is forbidden under the Israeli regulations to leave blank spaces to show where material has been deleted.

A random study by M Rubenstein of the excised stories showed that they con-tained no military or other state sccrets, but rather dealt with politics, Palestinian Nationalism and heritage, sentiments hostile to Israel and the legitimacy of Israel's existence. Also prohibited were items regarding resistance to the Israeli military authorities in the lands conquered in 1967, and Israili actions against Palestinian nationalist aspirations, such as the new Jewish settlements in the West Bank. the Gaza Strip and the Syrian Golan Heights.

The report concludes that the Palestinian journalists and editors in East Jerusalem - the Arab sector of the city annexed by Israel soon after the Six Day War - see their papers as "weapons" in the streggle against

Mr Rubenstein claims that neither the newspapers nor the censor regard freedom of the press as at issue but rather see their differences as "an all out war of survival" between Israel and the Palestiniains.

The study finds that the palestinian journalists select their news items, photographs, cartoons and headlines on the basis of their effectiveness in the national struggle".

Solidarity flushed with jail success

From Roger Boyes

As scores of political prisoners leave Poland's jails under the terms of a sweeping amnesty, so a vivid picture is emerging of how Solidarity activists kept their morale high and their nerves strong during two and a half years of captivity.

They could be seen at Warsaw central railway station at the weekend, a bit grizzled from lack of sleep and a shave, huge rucksacks forming a hump on their backs.

One fished out from a denim pocket a dice made intricately and over long boring hours from shaped bread pellets. Tipted with ink, it bore the inscription: "Solidarity lives in cell number X", each word etched on a face of the cube.

Another explained how communication was maintained between Solidarity activists: "We mainly used the five-by-five method, banging on the pipes. The letters of the alphabet are organized into five rows of five letters. The number of tene indicates are recisely retary, seemed to cast serious avoiding any mention of the doubts last night on whether Soviet denunciation on Friday of the American "deceitful" approach to arms control.

Apart from this traditional negotiations on space weapons, method of prison communication, one jail made use of an anomaly in the plumbing when the lavatory was flushed it was possible to talk through the pipes to a quite different section of the jail.

In Rakowiecka prison where Poland's main Solidarity leaders and advisers are still awaiting release, some inmates had to double up with drug smugglers from Sri Lanka. At least two of the former Solidarity leadership now have a rudimentary knowledge of the infinitely complex Sinhalese language.

So far only two of the top premartial law Solidarity eadership have been freed Mr Andrzej Gwiazda and Mr Grzegorz Palka. The principal underground leader to have been released is Mr Władysław Frasyniak, whose bitter protests in Barczewo prison earned him punishment after punishment from authorities.

About half of the 650 political prisoners in Poland have been freed so far. They are usually taken to the railway station in a closed prison vehicle and left on the platform to await their train home. When Mr Gwiazda was allowed to leave prison briefly to visit his sick mother before the amnesty came into effect, the policemen tried nnsuccessfully to buy him a ticket on the express train to Gdansk. Mr Benjamin Gibbon, then the camouflage officer on Kastellorizo, described the scene: "It was very hot weather and the closely packed, empty houses were bone dry and quite a strong wind was blowing, in act, perfect conditions for serious conflagration.

"An attempt was made to contain the blaze by creating a fire break. We blew up some houses but our efforts proved useless because the fire moved too fast in the strong wind."

Mr Philip Hawkins, then serving on a motor launch temporarily in the harbour, said the fire swept through the deserted town and "with the vast store of fael in drums undr immediate threat, the island had to be evacuated.

Hot pursuit of the American Dream

Jonathan Dimbleby admits that America is the easiest country in the world in which to make television programmes. Because people are so open to the instrusion of the camera, it is too tempting, he believes, to come back with a haul of American exotica - great wealth, appalling crime, excessive decadence - as if that were representative of the whole.

He parades these cliches in a brisk sequence at the opening of The American Dream, a four-part series for Yorkshire Television which begins tonight at 8.30, in order to dismiss them with the comment "It's tempting to see America as a nation that can't grow up. Then, with a virtusoso piece-to-camera delivered from behind the wheel of his fastmoving car to an accompanying camera-truck, he turns off the freeway in search of the real America.

He finds it down the by-roads of Middle America in the unsung township of Wahoo, Nebraska. The problem is to make Wahoo, where the police have more trouble from dogs than people, as viewable as the Los Angeles street we have just left, where they make 10 arrests a week for major crime and have just spectacularly felled a suspect. Dimbleby tackles the problem by adding the dimension of history. Four out of five small-town Americans are descended from nineteenth-century immigrants. They know their grandparents arrived with nothing, and had a hard time. That is why they are content for Wahoo to be as safe and dull and ultra-conservative as it is.

That is one sort of American Dream, but the term has resonance for all Americans. "Ask anybody what it means and they will give you an answer, although there are many different answers", says Dimbleby. Basically it is the belief that anyone. can become anything (provided, of course, that he or she is white) through hard work and sharp the fact that the become the greate

Their father killed himself when they began to beat him at his own game. The up. They rubbed shoulders with film-stars, hookers and gangsters. Their rags-to-riches story came to an end only when changing times overtook them. That, in brief, was the story of the Westmore brothers, which was told in the final edition of Omnibus (BBC1) last night. The family business was movie make-up, and at one time there was a Westmore brother in charge of that department at four of the biggest studios in Hollywood-The Westmores were credited with creating almost every memorable face in the movies, from Mary Pickford with her ringlets (individually hung) to The Creature from the Black Lagoon. today with a soap-opera scenario based on this family would no doubt be rejected out of hand. Even without the sub-plots, like the identical twins Perce and Ern who did not speak to each other for twenty years, the family history is extravagantly fanciful.

The story was told by the youngest brother, Frank, who stayed on to see one of his older siblings decree that the actors making Bonanza for the despised new medium of television would never get their faces fixed in his studio. Frank's monologue might profitably have been punctuated by memories from some of the great names he invoked. As it was, Frank's viewpoint was a little too close to the subject for us to get a fully convincing picture of it.

The piano is Dollar Brand's true orchestra, amply demonstrated in countless solo recitals and many recordings in the years since he left his native South Africa for a nomadic exile in Europe and the United States: so it was particularly interesting to discover how he adapts the characteristic procedures of his music to the seemingly broader palette of the septet which he brought to London on Friday.

Later the skill of the trombonist Dick Griffin, with an old-fashioned plunger mute, was employed to add effectively spare commentaries to a couple of those infectious township dances, vigorously intoned by the wide-grained richness of the saxophone choir. Which is how cars like the Mercedes-Benz 230E always remain so understatedly elegant, so quietly efficient. And so very far ahead.

It is the Mercedes-Benz philosophy that every aspect of a car should be truly excellent.

So, for example, the 230E offers you longlegged comfort as well as agile manoeuvrability.

——And it offers unparalleled standards of safety—a very special pre-occupation with Daimler-Benz.

We built our first experimental safety car in the 1930s, and by 1951 had patented the concept of the "safety-cell", with a rigid passenger compartment and progressively collapsible front, rear and side impact zones.

The 230E shares its bodyshell with four other models: the petrol-engined 200 and 280E, and the 240D and 300D, which have diesel engines.

They all have an enviable record of long, trouble-free life, because quality is engineered into every component. The better a car is built, the better it is likely to perform over time. So we build cars to the highest possible standards.

You'll discover just how, high those standards are when you drive a 230E. And what a lasting pleasure they can be.

Our investment is a million pounds .a day. The rewards will be all yours.

This could have gone on all day until one of us confessed to being all wrong, so I bade him farewell and rode off. It was only then that I discovered my front wheel was quite badly buckled.

I felt cross. Not just because he had done my bike an injury, but because he had been so blithe and unscathed about it.

We all feel a bit miffed when we accidentally stub a cigarette out on someone else's hand or karate chop his stomach when we only meant to to execute a Gallic gesture, and he shows no pain at all.

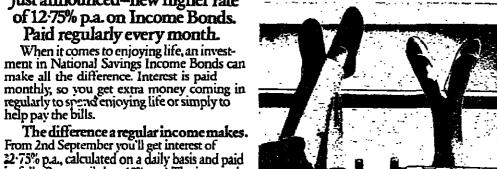

So my conclusion after witnessing these scenes of drama and violence is this if you or I are ever on the receiving end of an accident, for heaven's sake make the most of it.

As they bear you away on the express stretcher, screw your features up in agony and wave your arms about. As they rush you off the plane to the first aid post, roar with pain. When the bike strikes you amidriffs, collapse like Tom being sandbagged by Jerry. You may feel silly overacting.

Guides for expectant mothers are flooding

Some titles give good clues to the contents, such as Making Love in Pregnancy by Bing and Colman. Rather prim pencil-drawings show smiling men and large-stomached women finding adventurous positions; inter-spersed are accounts of sex from pregnant women that read like a survey in New Society. Then there is a class of books bought by expectant fathers and hated by expectant mothers. Typical of these is the Nilsson A Child is Born which is full of technically superb photographs of babies in the womb from tiny embryo onwards: these alienlooking creatures alarm many women but seem to help men to

The psychological equivalent of this is Verny's The Secret Life of the Unborn Child, which claims to show that a mother's transient emotional states dur-ing pregnancy will affect her child for the rest of its life. Using extremely dubious "memories" released under hypnosis, Dr Verny's American psychotherapy patients recall not only the traums of their birth but frightening events when they were in utero, ranging from the mother's illegitimate pregnancy becom-ing public to hot baths suppos-edly intended to induce abor> information-giving is becoming thin on the bookshelves though it is still strong in the hospitals. Women who think that natural childbirth is a bore and who do not want too great a culture-shock when they meet the maternity services should stick to Gordon Bourne's Pregnancy or Margaret Brady's Having A Baby Easily.

· Brady's book advertises itself as "A guide to natural birth", but nobody should be misled into expecting a book which will facilitate their personal freedoms. It is a nanny-knows-best publication: Nurse Brady is big on prunes and the "profession of motherhood", and will stand heavy meals from her mothers. To have her actually there running the household and the pregnancy would be bliss even with the prunes, but her book is an arid substitute. She tells the pregnant no more than she considers they need to know to be good patients, and is depressingly brisk about the importance of a good mental attitude and no hysterics.

The latest rage in childbirth education is Janet Balaskas. who preaches an intensely personal preparation for what she calls "active birth". There is no longer the exam-like emphasis of even five years ago on "learning your breathing" and "doing the right things" at different stages of labour. Instead, the whole of the pregnancy is given up to exercising and ante-natal yoga, with the message that a fit, confident, attuned body will tell its owner what to do at times of

LEAGUE OF ARAB STATES

NOTICE OF PREQUALIFICATION

The League of Arab States proposes to launch in the near future an international competitive bidding for the construction and equipment of its new headquarter in Tunis, Tunisia. The project extends over a surface-area of about 40.000 square metres including, particularly, a reception-room, a conference-hall, meeting-rooms, an office-building and an underground parking-lot.

The work will be tendered as a single lot involving all building, equipment and decoration services and must be completed within a global period of 24 months. Interested bidders are kindly requested to send their prequalification dossier before 31 July 1981 to the following address:

> League of Arab States, 37, Avenue Khereddine Pacha, Tunis, Tunisia.

The prequalification dossier should include the following items:

- 1. A checklist of similar projects carried out by the bidder over the last ten years with a specific mention of:
  - name of builder,
  - surface involved:
  - short summary of work completed:
  - final cost of project:
  - contract-defined period and effective execution-period.
- Amount of real capital and reserves.
- 3. Turnover for each of the last three years.
- 1. Number of permanent staff per professional category as well as organisation-chart.

And still on the theme of motherhood Will the test-tube child be happy?

By the time I was 24, I had two children, planned, perfect and, to carry the alliteration further, a pigeon pair. Since children narrow one's al boundaries as thoroughly as the most stringent duenna. the only other people I met at the time were young women similarly placed. We sat in each others' gardens every afternoon diluting Ribena, borrowing Paddi-Pads and talking obsessively about one thing contra-ception. Long before the medical profession published volumes of reports on the hazards of pill and coil, we were experiencing the nasty side-effects of both - cramps and depression, gain in weight and loss of libido. We switched from one method to another, grumbling but resigned. For though the members of our fecund circle liked each other's company, we hoped, one day, to cinch in the waist of our maternity dresses and go out into the wider world. During all those child-rearing years, I don't suppose any of us gave a thought to the women who could never be members of mother and baby group. Infertile? What's that? Much later. I met members of the doomed army of the childless. There was the Irish girl who, after her mother's death, had brought up eight younger brothers and sisters in County Limerick. Every parent has a vision of the ideal baby (sweetsmelling and dimpled grows into the ideal child (wellbehaved and academically brilliant). And every parent is to some extent let down by the teething, television-watching reality. Will parents who have been to hell and back in their efforts to have a child be able to cope with vaguely disap-pointing offspring? Will their children be able to cope with not coming up to scratch, not to mention being able to handle the knowledge of their own curious antecedents? Already, in America, children born via AID are trying to track down their "real" fathers. How do the men who have raised them, bought them bicycles, cuddled them through a nightmare feel "In many ways 1984 has been

Playing for time

The GLC has, I can reveal, found a ruse to ensure that if the Arts Council axes one of London's four main orchestras, it is not the Royal Philharmonic. The idea is to immediately book the RPO for a major series of concerts at the GLC-run Royal Festival Hall not just for next season, but for the next three, When GLC controller of operational services Laurence Peterkin (acting under instructions?) approached RFH concert administrator Anthony Phillips, Phillips protested that this would be thoroughly unethical. He was immediately threatened with suspension.

They have submitted five motions to the Tory party conference in October. demanding the privatization of coal mines to break the NUM, the total integration of Northern Ireland with the rest of the UK, the freezing of student grants at their current level, the abolition of the National Union of Students' closed shop and further privatization of the Health Service. But I am told that if the organizers practised medicine the same way they ran the games, "See Venice and would sound more like a threat than a promise. The British Council, innovatory as ever, is breaking new ground in the field of public relations. Piers Pendred, director of PR, has been sending out xeroxed letters with the reminder that "the British Council, as I am sure you are bored of hearing, is 50". Gradually warming to the task Pendred talks of a conference of 46 university vicechancellors and drones, "you never know, it could set the academic world alight".

John Carlin reports from Guatemala's front line

Fighting terror with terror

into the small Guatemalan village of Colotenango, near the Mexican border, lined up all the men they could find and squared up to them, one to one. The commanding officer gave an order and each soldier proceeded to beat up his rival - a humiliated punchbag of a man; malnourished, incomprehending, not daring to put up one finger in

The soldiers left, but despite all the teeth littering the ground and the bloodied noses, the sentiment in the village was not one of anger, resentment or even fear any more. Above all, the people felt relief. No one had been killed.

In the neighbouring village of Ixtahuacan, just down a dirt road. the soldiers had come in a few weeks before and shot dead half a dozen men. Their fault had been the same. The men of both villages - all of them Indians, like 70 per cent of Guatemala's population - had failed to perform with the expected diligence their duties in the civil defence patrols. These patrols form a national network which has become the lynchpin of the army's successful efforts to control a oncepowerful left-wing insurgency. Every able-bodied man in Guatemala's western provinces - El Quiche, Huchuetenango, San Marcos - has been drafted into the civil defence patrols. According to the army more than 700,000 - half Guatemala's adult males - have been recruited and armed with everything from sticks to machetes to Second World War rifles Their duties are to saturate the countryside with patrols and to guard road checkpoints in 24-hour shifts which they must perform, according to residents, between one and three times every eight days.

Colonel Mario Enrique Paiz, the officer in charge of the army's civil action section, told reporters in Guatemala City recently that the civil patrolmen were all volunteers who had joined forces with the army out of a shared zeal to defend themselves against communism.

But religious workers in the western provinces, where until just two years ago more than 5,000 guerrillas moved freely, will tell you that none of the patrolmen have the slightest notion what communism, capitalism or any other, "ism" might

Gratemalan soldiers on patrol: the village vigilantes fear them as much as the guerrillas

With 23 different languages, few speak the official language, Spanish, still fewer can read or write. The discovery of electric light has had less impact on their lives than the invention of gunpowder. "Army killings are perceived by the Indians as an act of God, as a natural disaster, like an earthquake", said a foreign analyst in Guatemala City.

Priests in western Guatemala - as vulnerable to violent death as anyone else - find the notion that the Indians might side with the army out of political conviction a ludicrous one. "The civil patrols were formed through terror, pure and simple", said one.

The level of army violence in Guatemala appears to have gone down. All that is needed these days to keep the population in line is the occasional routine reminder of what the army can do. People can hardly fail to remember the burning of scores of villages during General Efrain Rios Montt's regime in 1982 and the massacre of thousands of people, children included - all amply documented by international human rights groups. The massacres would often involve preliminary amputations, beheadings and some times crucifixions on trees.

"Terror serves an exemplary purpose", said a Guatemalan academic. "The way it did for the .

handful of Spaniards who colonized Guatemala in the sixteenth century." The army, which has 30,000 men, says it has trained the massive civil patrol force to be a first line of defence - "cannon fodder", in the opinion of others - and the eyes and ears of the local garrison. "Failure to participate is assumed to be a sign of sympathy for the guerrillas", said a priest.

"If a patrol out in the countryside decided to go up to the hills one day with the guerrillas, they would do so in the full knowledge that their families would be killed and, probably, their whole village razed."

The priest was frequently on the point of tears during our meeting, possessed of a sense of the abject hopelessness of his parishioners' lives. "They live in slavery. They perceive absolutely no alternative and every day they get hungrier", he Malnourishment and disease is worse than it ever has been among the Indians according to local doctors, They pin the blame in large measure on the civil patrol system, which is so time-consuming and energy-sapping that it does not allow the men to work the fields and belo to feed their families.

The army's aim in militarizing the whole countryside is not so much to fight the guerrillas as to provide a

Indian population: Every patrol member's name is on an army list The alternative of not serving does not exist, said the American human rights group Americas Watch, in its latest report on

In 1981 the guerrillas' insurgency in Guaternala was generally thought to be as powerful as in neighbouring El Salvador, and possibly more likely to overthrow the government in a country better suited topographically to guerrilla warfare. These days Guatemala's guerrillas are obliged to hole themselves up in remote mountainsides, limited militarily to placing the occasional landmine under an army truck.

Such has been the magnitude o government violence in Guatemala that, despite its geopolitical status as a key Central American "domino", the US has denied all military assistance since 1977. This deficiency has been clearly compensated in the eyes of the Guaten army, however, by the absence of any strings attached to guarantees about human rights.

"We don't want conditions, like El Salvador. We know how to fight our people", said Colonel Gustavo Mendez in his Huehuetenango garrison last year, speaking in a special disastive shous a notonious room directly above a notorious torture chamber.

The American government is privately concerned, nevertheless, at what it perceives to be a growing resentment among Guatemalan army officers towards the US. Guatemala is an important ideological ally in Central America, but has differed with the US, for example, on the issue of support for the contras in Nicaragua, as the foreign minister indicated in a recent Presidential elections due next year are designed to solidify what President Reagan and General Mejia have referred to as Guatemala's 'democratic process". About five years ago they were active in my parish, and used to go around using my name. I had to put out a printed circular dissociating myself from them. "Now I wouldn't be seen dead with them. I think they're potentially dangerous, and the coalition is a set-up for which they are trying to use the name of the Anglican Church."

A rather less severe view was taken by the Rev Jimmy Morrison, rector of Burghfield in Berkshire, who agreed to have his name put at the top of the coalition's notepaper. When I contacted him he admitted he had never attended a meeting of the coalition or met its officers. He said he did not know that the man who requested his permission was a Nevertheless he insisted: "I did not associate with the coalition because I am a sympathizer with the Unification Church. Rather I am a convinced and committed Anglican.

But I believe the European Parliament has come up with some had proposals, which I would oppose, whatever religious group was on the same platform with me."

What has encouraged such strong feelings? On May 22 the European Parliament approved a report, drawn up by its Committee on Youth, Culture, Education, Information and Sport. It was put together by the Conservative MEP for Bristol, Richard Cottrell, and is sometimes known as the Cottrell Report. The fruit of two years work, it dwells on complaints about the recruitment techniques and other alleged irregularities of a number of ments should draw up a code of practice for such groups, forbidding long-term commitments before the age of majority, requiring information on individuals and groups where necessary, and demanding freedom of access by families to cult members at all times. It also suggests European countries should "pool data on the international ramifi-cations" of cults.

'new religious movements", including the Unification Curch, the Hare Krishna Movement, the Children of God. Scientology and the followers of Baghwan Rajneesh.

However, the Rev Jimmy Morrison believes these proposals are "the thin end of the wedge". David Fraser Harris, British spokesman for the Unification Church, says: "They tend to restrict religion in a selective way. If this is the first step towards state assessment of acceptable state assessment of acceptable religious practice, we could end up with legislation affecting first the unpopular religions, and eventually the charismatics, the Jehovah's Witnesses, the Mormons, and any others with which there is some emotional prejudice."

Coalition literature asks how "new" should be defined. It suggests it would cover the United Reformed Church (an amalgamation of Pres-Church (an amalgamation of Pres-byterians and Congregationalists set up in 1973): or religions such as Rastafarianism, long-established in their countries of origin, but new to Britain and Europe; umbrella organizations representing minority religions such as Hindus; and even new bodies set up by established faiths, such as Christian CND.

The British Council of Churches has been among those who have voiced concern about the Cottrell report. The council's letter to European MPs outlining its opposition is now used by the Moonie sponsored coalition to support its case. The Rev Kenneth Cracknell, the council's secretary for relations with peoples of other faiths, admits that the coalition is not the ideal forum for opposition, and advocates a broader-based grouping. Richard Cottrell, however, says:

There is no threat to religious freedom in this country from any quarter. Therefore there is no reason for any such coalition at all, least of all from one whose leader has just been imprisoned for failing to keep within the confines of the law." He says there is evidence that the Unification Church "is attempting to infiltrate evangelical and pentacostalist type movements in this country, winding them up to believe there is a threat to their freedom."

He adds: "The Unification Church is clearly worried about the pending action of the Attorney General, who is seeking to remove their charity status. It wants to portray this as an assault on religious freedom in the same way that it has done with the Reverend Moon's case. In fact the Unification Church is currently in retreat in every country in the world. It would like to pretend that Moon has been jailed for anything other than tax-

If only Kinnock had spoken before

How I admired Neil Kinnock's letter defending the principle of one-member-one-vote! Such passion and commitment, such an eloquent use of the rhetorical question, the alliterative echo, the resounding phrase! "How in the name of democracy can they deny the chance to vote to the people who make up the party? ... Where is the the party? ... radicalism in the refusal to extend the franchise? ... Pure vintage

Of course it has to be admitted that the ideas are hardly new, and, put more prosaically, have been around within the Labour Party for some years. Take this for instance:

There is an irrefutable case to be made for all members of the Labour Party to have the automatic right to vote for all the principal officers of the constitu-ency and the National Executive as well as candidates for Parliament and local government ... A more democratic party will attract more members and be less susceptible to unrepresentative pressure groups and self-promoting cliques." This was written in 1976 in Socialist Commentary by Jim Daly, then a front-bench Labour member of the GLC, and later a founder member of the Social Democratic Party. Throughout the late 1970s the battle raged between the Campaign for Labour Party Democracy, which favoured the electoral college at national level and mandatory reselection by the general managelevel, and the Campaign for Labour Victory, which argued one-member-one-vote at both. I well remember one CLPD follower in my own local Labour party rounding on the CLV spokesman and asking with incredulous contempt: "Are you saying that just anyone should be allowed to youe?" Yes, the Labour Party has been here before.

And so the question has to be asked: where, during those debates, was the golden-voiced Mr Kinnock who now argues with such passion for the principle? The answer is that he did not then support it and nor did many of those MPs whose names are almost certainly on thelist of those lobbying Kinnock's support for change.
Last time round "one member, one vote" lost. The final crushing victory for the CLPD came at the Wembley Conference in January 1981. David Owen, commenting a few months later on the series of events that led up to this, was quoted in The Listener as saying:

We could have recovered if Denis Healey, Roy Hattersley, Merlyn Rees, Eric Varley and John

Smith had said we should go to the conference on 'one man, one vote'. When they ditched that last November justide the Shadow Cabinet I knew they had no stomach for a proper fight... That was the time I knew we had to fight for one member, one vote in January, and if we went down in that conference, then either we created a new party or I should

The list at the beginning of that quotation is revealing. Of those still in the House of Commons, it is a safe bet to assume they are vigorously backing the democratic principle now. Denis Healey was quoted in The Guardian on Wednesday as saying the proposal made "perfectly good sense".

Finicky nit-pickers will argue that the issues are different. Technically this is true one involved the selection of leader, the other the selection of MP. Yet, as Jim Daly's comments quoted earlier suggest, the principle is the same. And the interesting thing is that the great majority of Labour MPs who were involved in CLV in the late 1970s, including the original "Gang of Three", were under no immediate threat in their own constituencies and had no reason, personally, to fear mandatory reselection by their general management committees.

Their desire for reform was uickened less by personal interest than by a general perception that the views of the GMCs were becoming increasingly unrepresentative of the party as a whole, and were tending more towards pure socialism than the traditional broad church that had always embraced social democracy as well. The motivation of these one-member-one-vote-ers contrasts sharply with the sudden taste for democracy developed by certain MPs who now feel under threat. Neither Gerald Kaufman nor John Silkin showed any interest in the idea when it was being pressed by CLV five years ago. The splendid letter of Mr Kinnock's concludes: "Do those who oppose the proposals for direct membership voting really think that the great majority of party members cannot be trusted to make a judgment? If they do, they had better say so."

Oh bravo, stirring stuff! And if only Neil Kinnock and Roy Hattersley and Denis Healey and all of the rest of them had gone round the constituencies in 1979 and 1980 thus roundly rebuking the comrades for their arrogance, who knows what might not have happened?

Circus thrills: how dull the fact

Old men in country rectories wait to be denounced by an old man in an Australian prefab. A young woman receives flowers from CND on leaving jail. An alleged Mata Hari wafts clouds of scent across the Old. Bailey, unhinging the senses of hard-bitten crime reporters. And middleaged civil servants and journalists continue to scurry about from lunch to conference to lunch in their strange relationship of mutual collusion and suspicion. One way or another, a considerable number of people are involved in the secrets obsession which effortlessly defies scorn and survives parody.

It is more than 30 years now since Burgess and Maclean defected. Since then, countless cartoons have wisecracked that Britain can no longer have any secrets worth selling because the Russians know them all already. I have read almost as many letters to the newspapers urging charity if not amnesty for these elderly gentlemen, on the grounds that it was all a long time ago and they have repented of their errors. Weary reviewers complain that spy thrillers become more mechanical and unconvincing. Yet still they come . . . the Ninth Man, the most amazing Espionage Novel of our time, the most Damaging Leak yet.

International spies and domestic leaks belong to the same family of obsessions. They are all based on the illusion that the secret world is more powerful, more fascinating, more important than the known world. Despite all evidence to the contrary, people continue to believe that, in real life as in L'Attaque, the spy can always capture the commander-in-chief. If only A has the inside information on B, he can seal B's doom (an illusion shared by successive American presidents and one on which J. Edgar Hoover grew fatter and fatter) fatter and fatter).

Yet in real life, it tends to be outside information which seals B's dustate information which scars os doom: the evidence at the inquest (Chappaquiddick) or the magistrates court (Jeremy Thorpe) or the bankruptcy hearing (Poulson and Maudling), the economic statistics, the casualty figures or the vote in the House. The drip-drip of the leak may be water torture to the minister and nectar to his opponents, but is seldom fatal.

Indeed, it is usually the document itself which is the lure rather than itscontents, which tend to be a let-down. The ministerial heading on the paper, the secret classification, the giveaway sentence "it would be publish evidence and the giveaway sentence "it would be publish evidence and reach preliminary conpublicly at this stage" – it is these clusions far more openly than they which send shudders down the do on all sorts of subjects, without prejudicing freedom of discussion or ultimate collective responsibility.

The minister's spine. Hence the wisdom prejudicing freedom of discussion or ultimate collective responsibility. "if the contents of these secret documents were known, it would bring down two governments and at obsession. Publish everything in papers blue, white and green, and these medieval vapours will fly away. so the argument runs. And in Britain, as in most western countries, governments do publish far more material then they did 10 years ago.

enally on 1980

Yet who reads all this stuff? Who bothers to collate it and interpret it? Sir Geoffrey Howe, when Chancellor of the Exchequer, gave a daring but rather long discourse to a Cambridge summer school on the reforms which a radical Tory government might contemplate. Nobody paid much attention. Yet when a similar, in fact rather tamer, exercise by the Central Policy Review Staff was leaked, the media were full of it.

In British domestic politics at least, secrets have a very short shelf life. In my experience, most of the important non-military ones are in the newspapers, by fair means or foul, within a week, and they are stale within a fortnight. Yet people prefer to believe in a hermetic world in which the ultimate truth lies deep hidden and nations are really governed by men whose names are unknown to the general public.

Why? The usual explanation is why? The usual explanation is that it is because the modern world is so alien and mysterious and people feel so powerless. I am not so sure; after all, in many ways the world is rather less mysterious than it was. I suspect that the truth is the opposite. It is because the world seems so open and flat that seems so open and flat that conspiracy theories flourish; and the conspiracy mechanisms; and me flatter it gets, the more we meed our spics to re-enchant the world, and the readier we shall be to believe that the Pope was murdered by Freemasons and that the everlasting light-halb and respectfulled bear here. light-bulb and razor-blade have been suppressed by an international

The latest campaign to reform the Official Secrets Act is backed by all sorts of admirable people. The opponents of such campaigns argue that it is impossible to abolish government's innate tendency towards secrecy. Throw Cabinet meetings open to the press, they say, and the real decisions would simply be taken in private by smaller meetings of ministers, and, if those were made public, by smaller meetings still, and so on inwardly until the Prime Minister and the Chancellor would be forced to meet, like westerners in Moscow, in the like westerners in Moscow, in the bathroom with the taps running.

In practice, there is a huge negotiable area of publish evidence and arguments, debate and reach preliminary condenses and reach preliminary condenses are preliminary condens But what no degree of openness in government could ever dispel is the belief that the true story has not yet been told. ## STILL ON COURSE

During the first year of Mrs. Thatcher's second parliamentary term, the Government has been accident-prone as well as inclined to political misjudgment On a number of significant issues. But there has been nothing accidental about the crisis into which it has been thrown by the dispute af the coal mines during the past twenty weeks. Throughout its five years in office, the government had been expecting just such an attempt to break its authority by the political misuse of union power, and it has had time to prepare itself, materially (with coal stocks at the power stations) as well as psychologically.
In the end, the challenge came in a form which has helped the Government to resist it, the attack being led by a man whose political motivation and ambition to destroy the elected Government by the misuse of union power are palpable. Mr Arthur Scargill's abuse of his own authority by the denial of the ballot that so many of his members want, the refusal of the miners in one of Britain's most productive coalfields to join the strike, and above all the violence and intimidation of mass picketing, have all alienated public opinion from Mr Scargill's cause. Indeed, they have denied him the support of other unions, which are unwilling either to jeopardize their own jobs or to join the dangerous game of trying to use industrial strength to bring down an elected government. The collapse of the dock strike has been the best evidence so far of the refusal of rank-andfile trade unionists to enlist in Mr Scargill's cause and this failure to broaden the dispute may well prove to have been the turning point to his defeat.

Though the National Coal Board came dangerously close to offering too much in the last attempt at negotiation the signs are that the ggovernment will stand firm on the essentials in the dispute. Assuming that it does, it will win the victory that is now most important to it. It is true that Mr Scargill will have exacted a high price for his defeat. The coal strike and its consequences, quite apart, from the direct cost to the public purse, have been damaging to financial confidence especially. because they have (though to an unquantifiable extent) contributed to the rise in interest rates that is bound to be an inhibition on industrial recovery.

Even so, the present exceptionally high level of real interest rates in the United Kingdom is probably due rather more to the rate of interest in the United States and to the strength of the dollar than to internal British problems. To the extent that internal influences are to blame. the dock strike probably played a bigger part than the coal strike, and the failure of interest levels to fall back when the dock strike collapsed has probably been owing chiefly to the continuing uncertainty about the future of United States deficit financing. The cost of Mr Scargill is more than the country ought to have to pay but it is certainly well within the country's capacity to' pay it in order to do what has to be done.

Such, then are the most serious questions overhanging the Government as Parliament think that a Labour Government disperses this week, and they put into proper perspective its other embarrassments over GCHQ (at the hands of the High Court) or over postal balloting for trade union elections and the interim "paving bill" arrangements be-fore the GLC and the Metropolitan Counties are abolished (in both of which cases the rebuke came from the House of Lords). The last of these troubles, together with the difficulties with rate-capping, are largely the penalty the Government is paying for improvizing its policies for local government as it has gone along, with no clearly thought out plan beyond the laudable general aim of somehow preventing the profligacy of local authorities from undermining control over national spending. On some of these questions. ministerial clumsiness has seemed to give the Labour Opposition a tactical advantage, as well as upsetting significant sections of Conservative opinion. But taken in the round, the Government's problems seem much less menacing than those that lie ahead of the Labour It is not simply that Mr Scargill is in many ways a greater embarrassment to Mr Neil Kinnock than he is a nuisance to Mrs Thatcher. That this is indeed the case is indicated by the need Mr Kinnock felt to underwrite Mr Scargill's cause publicly, despite his known dislike of the miners' leader's methods. But more potentially dangerous are the signs that the old internal quarrels over organization and policy are again about to erupt in the Labour Party. During the parliamentary session since the election, Mr Kinnock has enjoyed a honeymoon with his party and to some extent with the public by ensuring that the Labour Party eschewed any serious discussion of its own policies.

Now, on finding some of his leading front-bench colleagues, as well as some of Labour's most promising backbenchers, such as Mr Frank Field, threatened by the process of "re-selection". Mr Kinnock, though denying the reality of the threat, has persuaded the National Executive proposal that local management committees should have the option (no more) of handing the re-selection process over to a ballot of all the members in the hope that this will be a force for moderation. Though it seems unlikely that the party conference this October will reverse that decision, it will undoubtedly reopen the arguments over party organization which have damaged the party in recent years.

Still more seriously, the National Executive has finally shifted the Labour Party's defence policy to an unambiguous acceptance of nuclear disarmament, ostensibly justifying this by offering a greater expenditure on conventional weapons. Polaris is to be "de-commissioned" and not even a vestige seems to remain of the former pretence that our present nuclear defence will be thrown into general arms negotiations.

It may be argued that a public conditioned by Labour's past behaviour will be tempted to would not act on Labour's Opposition commitments, But in the present condition of the party it would be no more safe to assume that than it would be to accept the new concern for conventional weapons at face value. The likelihood is that when the implications of Labour's defence policy are again probed for their effect on the Western Alliance, the public's response will be damaging to Mr Kinnock's political prospects. The same is also true of Labour's economic policy over which a veil has been discreetly cast during the past year.

Tomorrow the Government's economic, industrial and employment policies will be under attack in the House of Commons in the last major debate of this Session. That unemployment is potentially one of the Government's principal weaknesses is incontrovertible, but more generally Mrs Thatcher is perfectly justified in pointing out, as she repeatedly does, that gross domestic product is up by 2.75 per cent on the year, industrial output by 3.5 per cent and total fixed investment by 10 per cent all against a background of the lowest inflation figure for fifteen years. That there are some anxieties about the money supply seems clear, but in general terms it is the damage to confidence from the present dispute that is the chief cause for anxiety. By comparison, the more the Labour Party is obliged to reveal the direction of its own economic and industrial policy, the more it is likely to indicate the continuing drift to the left. This should, of course, give.

some encouragement to the Alliance parties whose advance in the by-elections (to first place in terms of total votes) has been one of the most notable political features of the past year. It has further enjoyed the advantage of a sustained performance of distinction by Dr David Owen who is now one of the few Members who tends to fill the benches when he rises to speak. Unfortunately for the Alliance, however, the by-election successes have been achieved largely with the help of dissenting Tories (who notoriously return to base at general elections) and without the support it needs from defecting Labour

Mrs Thatcher has many tests ahead, and she has not in this Parliament shown herself skilled at public communication or at avoiding political traps. Yet despite Mr Francis Pym's increasingly outmoded complaints, she leads a fundamentally united party, and she stands to reap great rewards from the risks she is now taking in her attempt to change some of the attitudes that have been most weakening to British society. At the end of this parliamentary session, what appeared a year ago to be the two most important facts of political life remain unchanged. The first is that the Government's principal rival under Mr Kinnock seems even more plainly set on offering what the public has plainly indicated it does not want. The second is that the Conservative Government, for all its shortcomings, has a coherence in objectives that none of its rivals can yet match.

MUST EFFICIENCY BE DULL?

It is very easy to be cynical about the Government's Whitehall efficiency drive. Even its annual set-piece, the publication of a White Paper giving details of progress made, is a bloodless affair. Last week's document did not contain a single memorable. phrase. Does the language of Expenditure Survey, in which accountancy and management consultancy have to be so barren, sprouting only inactonyms? comprehensible Thanks to its education system, Britain had traditionally been split between those who can count and those who can read. Those responsible for implementing Mrs Thatcher's financial management initiative can do both. But they manage to mine only linguistic lead from the disciplines they quarry.

The initiative has bred two schools of cynics-cumcritics. The first say it is too feeble, gelded by the kind of bureaucracy that even a wouldbe pioneering Whitehall exercise produces with no less than two central units trying to coordinate departments and all at a cost of £20m a year. The second group, usually senior civil servants within sight of retirement, belong to the "this, too, will pass" school. They can recite a litany of failed past reforms each with its dreadful acronym and each intended to be the platform from which the central administrative machine would launch itself into a new and lasting era of efficiency and effectiveness.

both schools are wrong. Beneath the jargon and behind the ennui. something is happening. Two years on from the start of the financial management initiative, matters have reached a crucial stage. The 1984-85 Public the real politics - the fight for who gets what - is played out, is the test. Can the lessons of the experimental stage of the initiative, the attempts to plan and manage manpower and money more rationally and effectively, be applied to the horse-trading which determines the disbursement of the £126 billion in the public purse?

If one could wire certain Whitehall committee rooms for sound this week an answer could be attempted, because the battle for the spending budget is already being waged. If Ministers really are serious about the initiative and want to use the new management information it has placed on their desks, they will behave rather differently this autumn' in the "Star Chamber", the secret Cabinet committee in which the final battle for the last pound is fought

The omens here are not good. The now defunct Think Tank spent a good part of the 1970s trying to bring reason, balance and a sense of the long term to the spending process. Can the financial management initiative succeed where the Think Tank,

There is a good chance that the programme analysis and review system, and the rest failed? Or will Ministers, as usual, behave like the cruder kind of prize fighter in the ring and apply the only skills they know - those acquired during their ascent from local politics, through the backbenches and junior office to the Cabinet Room?

> The financial management initiators have one ace to play the Prime Minister. She is as keen on their enterprise as ever. Sir Robin Ibbs of ICI, her parttime efficiency adviser, has a few pre-recess days in which to make a sensible suggestion. Why cannot Mrs Thatcher, as her first act on returning from holidays. summon the big spenders in her Cabinet and tell them this autumn is going to be different; that it must see a breakthrough; that they will use the tools of the financial management initiative in the last crucial phases of decision-taking on spending, or else? As her part of the bargain, she might ask the playwright, Sir Ronald Millar, her most gifted phrasemaker, to coin a few words that make the financial management initiative comprehensible and memorable, to give it a wider appeal and a larger constituency. Her full-timers in the Cabinet Office, capable and determined though they are, would have made the Sermon on the Mount sound like a reading from the Jerusalem telephone directory.

Central America From Mr R. J. Vincent

Sir. George Walden suggests (feature, July 20) that we in Europe should "play ball in Reagan's yard", by which he means going along with current United States policy in Central America, even to the extent of supporting armed intervention in Honduras directed against the regime in Nicaragua.

Objective view of

His reasons for going along are the disagreeable consequences that might follow in Europe if Europeans are deaf to United States concern in Central America and the worse policies that the United States might adopt there if we fail to support the

This mistakes the nature of our influence on the Unites States, as well as taking up too slavish an attitude to our principal ally. It supposes that our view of Central America should be decided by what is good for our relationship with the United States which under our influence; and that failure to take a charitable view will lead the United States into even worse policies, which overestimates our

Our view should follow from our own judgment of the politics of Central America. The states of that region are equal members with us of international society, as entitled as we are to immunity from the foreign intervention they have been accustomed to suffering, more from the United States than the Soviet Union. We should see them as members of international society and not merely as parts of an American sphere of influence.

We should also see them as developing states more concerned with protecting their political and economic independence from any outside power than with joining up with one against another.

These are the views we should make known to the United States in an attempt to dissuade her from seeing the region exclusively in the light of the contest between East and West. The attempt may fail, but allies should not bury the right advice beneath what they imagine to be an American need for a yes-man.

Yours faithfully, R. J. VINCENT, 11 Woodland Avenue. Wolstanton, Newcastle-under-Lyme, Staffordshire.

Airline competition From Mr Raymond Colegate

Sir, I wonder whether Sir Henry Marking (July 27) has read the CAA's recent report, since he quite misses the point when he says that route transfers from British Airways to smaller British airlines will not lead to more competition.

The report makes it abundantly clear that there is only limited scope for dual designation. While individual route transfers may not in themselves provide an immediate stimulus to direct, competition, taken as a whole they will strengthen the base upon which the smaller British airlines can compete more effectively with the dominant airline in the longer term.
What the CAA is saying is that you cannot have effective competition without strong competitors. The consultation confirmed what has long been apparent this country's smaller airtines are not strong enough and something should be done to correct this imbalance. Yours faithfully, RAYMOND COLEGATE, Group Director Economic Regulation, Civil Aviation Authority, CAA House, 45-59 Kingsway, WC2.

Flag of inconvenience

From Mr John Munday Sir, The death's head, the bones, the whole skeleton, the hour glass, death's dart, those emblems of mortality found on old tombstones all featured, evidently on pirate flags.

An illustration of a selection, dating from Queen Anne's time, will be found reproduced in Basil Lubbock's The Blackwall Frigates, 1922 and later editions.

As Mr Hague (July 14) surmises, the bones could be behind or beneath the skull but the message seems to have been the same: "no quarter" or "dead men tell no tales". One could design an even jollier Roger by rearranging the approved ingredients to form an original, unique and forbidding design and it is of interest to note that during the Second World War some of HM submarines flew a Jolly Roger whereon their "kill" was recorded. Yours faithfully, JOHN MUNDAY, 2 Feathers Place, Greenwich, SE10.

Distress in miscarriage From the Reverend Canon Colin Slee

Sir, You report today (July 19) the distressing case of a doctor found guilty by the General Medical Council of serious professional misconduct in relation to telling a woman to dispose of the foetus, caused by her having a miscarriage. This is not a particularly unusual occurrence.

The parish staff of the Cathedral and Abbey Church of Saint Alban have been in contact with local medical authorities during the past few months concerning the general issue of miscarriages, and the proper treatment of those concerned. It has been our experience that there is no one officially responsible for dealing with the disposal of miscarried pregnancies.

We have frequently found distressed mothers who have been responsible for disposal themselves either, as you report, flushing them unviable foctus.

Barristers' monopoly unjustified

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

From Colin R. McEwen

Sir, On July 25 you reported that Lord Chief Justice Lane had suggested that certain more minor crimes should be triable in the magistrates' court rather than in the crown court in an effort to save costs. He particularly noted that few crown court trials, no matter how trivial their substance, take less than one or two days.

On the following day you noted that the Chairman of the Bar, Mr Michael Wright QC, was attacking the suggestion that solicitors employed in the proposed prosecution service should be permitted to appear in the crown courts, work normally reserved for barristers.

His principal grounds for opposition were apparently that less work would be available to young barristers and that ultimately it might lead to a fused profession, which suggestion was rejected by the Benson Commission.

I suggest that, in this day and age, the retention of a monopoly merely on the grounds that it provides work for the younger members of the profession cannot be justified and that the proposed new service is one of several new factors which render the Benson Commission's rec-ommendation obsolescent. Certainly the Government has seen little force in either argument advanced by Mr Wright when considering the position of solicitors in recent months.

If the rules are not relaxed for the new prosecution service this must surely mean that the abler and more experienced solicitor advocates will not be attracted to join, as they will be obliged to hand all crown court matters to barristers who may be a good deal less experienced.

Mr Wright surely cannot be correct in arguing that "serious cases such as those that come before the crown court" should provide the "basic training ground" upon which young criminal barristers learn their

If these cases truly are of a serious nature, then they should be dealt with by an advocate who has already learnt his trade elsewhere and the local magistrates' court provide just such a training for the specialist

In the wider context, if it is accepted that the aim of the legal system is to provide justice for the ordinary citizen then the present strict and inflexible financial rules imposed on the fund by the Treasury provide a real threat to it. In the magistrates' court, where solicitors normally appear as advo-cates it is unusual for a trial to last more than half a day. Given that the presentation of a case by a barrister in the crown court involves a duplication of work for both the prosecution and defence, and given the length of an average crown court trial as assessed by the Lord Chief the Legal Aid Fund of granting a right of audience to solicitors would significant and that the mone thus saved by the Legal Aid Fund could be well used elsewhere.

Of course none of this would prevent a specialist barrister being employed in an appropriate case. We must expect the barristers to be as eloquent in defence of the bar's monopoly as they would be for the most valued of their clients, but in the last analysis they are defending what is, in this day and age, indefensible.

Yours sincerely. C. R. McEWEN. 5 Byron Court, South Marston, Swindon, Wiltshire.

From Mr A. S. Lamboll, JP

Sir, As one who has served as a magistrate in the London area for 17 years, I endorse wholeheartedly the Lord Chief Justice when he calls (report, July 25) for the abolition of the right to trial by jury in cases of trivial thefts, for I have always felt that if the walve involved is best than that if the value involved is less than say, £100, the powers of a magistrates' court are adequate.

Despite the cost to the taxpayer and the time taken in the high courts, the principle has always been accepted that election for trial by jury is reasonable on the grounds that anyone convicted of theft, or indeed fraud, however minimal the sum involved, is liable to immediate dismissal, disqualification from practice if a professional, and loss of livelihood and possible hardship for the rest of his or her life; the sugma

To avoid this slightly unnecessary prejudice, cannot the law provide for "petty" offences which will make it clear to any employer or professional organisation that the conviction was against a misde-meanour of but momentary aberration, which perhaps society might accept, on one isolated occasion?

I am etc. ALAN LAMBOLL Little Buckden, Iken. Nr Woodbridge, Suffolk.

From Mr Gershon Ellenbogen

Sir, Some years ago I was deputy judge at the trial of an elderly tramp, who was charged with stealing a Mars bar from a supermarker. Being of no fixed abode, and with many previous convictions, he spent some months in custody before the trial (making sure of this free board and lodging by breaking a window or two after his first court appearance). As the evidence afforded overwhelming proof of his guilt, prosecuting counsel rightly forbore to address the jury; and defence counsel did the best he could for his client, exploring every cul-de-sac and leaving no peoble unturned. After a retirement of two hours (oh, to have been a fly on that wall!), the jury unanimously acquitted. The hearing had taken the best part of two days.

Did it really justice that this defendant could insist on trial by jury, when after a brief trial in a magistrates' court he would, if convicted, have been sentenced to (say) "£10 or one day", and been released forthwith? I am etc. .

GERSHON ELLENBOGEN 2 Gray's Inn Square, WC1. July 27.

Beatrix Potter proposal From Mr Peter Mayer

Sir, I am writing to comment on the anxieties expressed in Mr R. J. Q. James's letter of July 23 about the Beatrix Potter theme park being planned by the American entrepre-neur, Mr Robert Jani, "for profit".

First, your report of July 17 sited the theme in the Lake District, in fact its siting is not yet settled but will certainly not be in the Lake

More importantly, the public will have to judge of the quality of the theme park when it opens. The Warnes, who first published Beatrix Potter, and Allen Lane, who founded Penguin, were entrepreneurs, published for profit, and had an understanding of and respect for their writers' art.

The Penguin of today, I believe, is not different. Nor are the words "entrepreneur", "profit" and indeed
"American" necessarily pejoratives, as Mr James implies.

I should add that Penguin, like Frederick Warne before them, devote much time and care to checking the standards of anything bearing Beatrix Potter's name. It should be said that the first exploitation of her work outside books took place during her lifetime and with her approval.

The notion that children's classics are inviolate is an adult view which children rarely share. Many fine films, plays and even loved toys have their origin in characters created in word and picture in the world of the book.

The real questions respecting the extension of Beatrix Potter's work down the lavatory, or burying them in the garden, or putting them in a plastic bag in the dustbin. All these methods are humiliating and distressing both for the mother and for others who seek to help in her factory. The miscarriage is clearly not the responsibility of the midwife, nor of the health visitor as the birth has not yet occurred, nor apparently of the GP as the doctor's responsibility should be the care of caused to mothers and it is our experience that sadness, guilt and confusion arise as much from disposal as from the miscarriage, which many mothers can see as nature's method of aborting an

The position is highly unsatisinto other forms, whether a theme park along Mr Jani's lines or a ballet such as Sir Frederick Ashton's, are: (1) is the extension done well and with taste; and (2) does it broaden the appeal of Beatrix Potter's books? Yours faithfully, PETER MAYER, Chief Executive.

Review of benefits From the Director of the Family

Welfare Association

Sir, The case presented in The Reform of Social Security, just brought out by the Institute of Fiscal Studies (report, July 12), adds to the argument advanced by the Family Welfare Association that what is currently needed is not an independent examination of a series of benefits now extended to include maternity benefit, but a thorough examination of the whole system of income maintenance and its integration with the income tax system. No amount of tinkering with individual benefits, particularly with a nil cost assumption, will remedy the now apparent defects of the system. Only an authoritative, radical enquiry can explore the merit of any proposed new scheme. The Family Weifare Association calls upon the Government to institute such an enquiry and not use the work of the present review panels as a preliminary to it.

Yours,
R. E. MORLEY, Director,
The Family Welfare Association,
501-505 Kingsland Road, Dalston, E8. July 16.

It must also be concluded that many mothers suffer great distress completely unknown. I know of a mother having a miscarriage (not in this city), who was refused access to her GP by his receptionist and told she could have an appointment five days hence even though she pleaded that she was at that very time miscarrying. Such private agony must be frequent, as figures show miscarriages to be several times the incidence of birth.

At present we only learn of such the mother and not that of an undertaker. Undertakers are not circumstances through our regular parish visitors and contacts, quite responsible as there has been no properly, doctors must observe the confidentiality of their relationship We are quite certain that this and are not in a position to inform vacuum in responsibility is a considerable aspect of the traumas

Yours succrely, COLIN SLEE, The Old Rectory, Sumpter Yard, St Albans, Hertfordshire. July 19.

Helping hand at time of divorce

From the Reverend John Bradford Sir, The plea of Mrs Thelma Fisher (July 19) for the Church of England to give serious thought to offering help at the time of a couple's divorce puts the finger on a worrying weakness in pastoral practice.

Although in law the only ground for divorce is irretrievable break-down, in a real life the suffering within a broken marriage stems from three causes: 1. The gradual extinction of love. 2. Injury of one kind or another within the marriage relationship. 3. Desertion.

It is the task of the Church's pastoral counsellor (who may or may not be a clergyman) to be clear about these categories and to give pastoral care suited to the type of trauma suffered. Such pastoral care would include support for any reasonable possibility for reconcil-

In cases where reconciliation is not effective the Church of England, and any church, needs to help the individual to be at peace with himself or berself after divorce and to grow in a spirit of conciliation of a divorce. Attention should be given, for example, to a service for the recognition of a divorce such as that drafted by the Reverend John H. Westerhoff, of the American Episcopal Church.

Such a background of assistance and understanding by the Church would give a context within which the Church's care for the children of divorcing parents could best be developed.

In the report of the ecumenical working party on the effects of divorce on children published by the society last year the key recommendation was to see the needs and rights of the child or tecnager as being of paramount importance. A five-point programme of pastoral support from the churches was proposed.

There is no question but that a holistic approach of pastoral care for all members of a divorcing family is the ideal. Current debate about ecclesiastical procedures in connection with the remarriage should not be allowed to obscure these fundamental pastoral issues. Yours faithfully,

JOHN BRADFORD. Chaptain Missioner, The Children's Society. Church of England Children's Old Town Hall, Kennington Road, SE11. July 23.

Appointment of Bishops

From the Bishop of Kensington Sir. There is one reason why the grateful that the House of Commons has refused to agree to the Appointment of Bishops Measure, even if it is a reason of which Mr Enoch Powell would scarcely approve.

The traditional procedure whereby a bishop must be elected by his dean and chapter has two merits. First, it is statutory; and secondly, however formalized the process may be, the Prime Minister's nomination is openly submitted to the judgment of the local church.

The new arrangement whereby names are proposed to the Prime Minister by the Crown Appointments Commission is no adequate substitute because, first, it has no statutory force, and secondly, there is no open check on it. Nobody is supposed to know if the Prime Minister rejects the Church's judgment

The ancient procedure may be creaky and embarrassing. But it should not be abolished until it is replaced by another instrument which will give statutory, and not merely discretionary, expression to the role the local church in the choice of its chief pastor. Yours faithfully, MARK KENSINGTON, 19 Campden Hill Square, W8. July 23.

Man of Letters

From Mr Laurence Mann Sir, Your correspondents, Mr and Mrs John Rabson (July 23) ask for the correct method of indicating one with a plurality of doctorates.

I would suggest that it would not be incorrect to follow the fairly usual practice of doubling the last letter of the relevant abbreviation as is frequently done in the cases of a Bachelor of Laws (LLB); pages (pp); or clauses (cll).

This would lead to the abbreviation of PhhD, which is neither unwieldy nor, I submit, a radical departure from tradition. Yours faithfully, LAURENCE MANN, 31 Braemar Avenue, Purley Oaks, Sanderstead,

From Mr H. A. Guy Sir, Mr and Mrs Rabson (July 23) ask for suggestions how to indicate more than one doctorate. I would suggest PhD (bis) - with feeling, as, after two attempts, I am entitled to sign myself Yours faithfully. H. A. GUY (Failed PhD(bis), 7 Camden Way,

Pragmatic secular philosophies are unhappy with it, but it is the question doctors asking, and moral theologians are the people who take it seriously. It becomes a religious question, therefore, by default, still have to be negotiated. Before they can answer the question, the moral theologians will have to go back to the scientists for more information, to discover what properties an early embryo has in common with forms of life which are unequivocally human, and what important differences there may be. Those who believe the conceptus is already human life, not to be discarded or altered destructively, have to justify themselves in the light of this revealing fact. would not therefore possess "life"; which is another way of saying to lower a moral theologian into a vat of liquid nitrogen is morally speaking quite different from lowering a two-day old embryo into it; and so is the resultant inert entity. One can resume its organic processes naturally; the other would require a miracle. And this suggests a difference in kind between the two. The former is not yet committed to "life" processes which cannot - without causing death - be stopped. It does not have one of the essential properties of life, an mperative continuity of basic biological functions. It is perhaps some such perception as this which makes doctors engaged in in vitrio research so intuitively impatient with the conservative moral position: something they are being told which does not quite add up. Gallup had a PhD in ournalism from the University of Iowa, but he was more a practical minded tinkerer than a scholar, and his solid off presence his booming laugh and his staid dark suits gave him the appearance of prosperous businessman, which be also was. He was for years the largest stockholder and chairman of the Gallup Organisation, the corporation that carried out much of his attitude sampling. It was in 1935, after Gallup had been hired to do research for the New York advertising agency, Young and Rubicam, that he founded the Gallup Poll with its headquarters in Princeton, New Jersey, and an editorial office in New York. The organisation was rather grandly christened the American Institute of Public Ominion and a similar British Institute was established in 1936.

The aim was to test and measure public opinion by methods which Gallup had found to be both practical and accurate in advertising. The idea was not new in American life and had been known under the name of "straw ballots" for more than half a century, as an election came along a newspaper would canvass a number of representative people to secure an indication of how the yoting would go. This had been practised on an extensive scale by a weekly journal The Literary Digest, whose results proved fairly accurate until the election of 1936 when a hopelessly wrong prophecy

Sex and the single gene in 100,000

By Pearce Wright, Science Editor

More than 100,000 genes are needed to determine the makeup of every person in the world, from the colour of eyes to that most unique of personal characteristics - the finger-print. Although the whole blueprint is contained in every one of the millions of cells of our body, only a few genes related to that particular part of the body are switched on in

In the search to understand what controls this delicate operation, whereby the blue-print is followed for the evolution of a unique individual, scientists have found evidence that just one gene is responsible for the male characteristic.

The conclusion that only one in 100,000 genes separates the sexes, comes from a fascinating investigation at the Medical Research Council's laboratory of molecular biology at Cambridge. The work began with an investigation into a humble worm, called Caenorhabditis elegans.

The tiny organism, a few millimetres long, is classed by the zoologists as a nematode. It thrives in the soil in most narts of the world.

It became important to the biologists at Cambridge first because it consists of only a few hundred cells and genes. The organism was chosen as suitable for an investigation suggested 20 years ago by Dr Sidney Brenner, now director of the laboratory, as ideal to study the process known as cell differentiation.

A fundamental question of biology lay behind the choice of this tiny thread-of-a-worm as an organism for one of the most intensive research projects ever mounted in the biological sciences.

The question is, how does a single fertilized egg know how to grow into a complicated biological system comprising a human being? As daughtercells are produced each time an embryo grows, how does a cell know that it is the start of a brain, an eye, a leg, a heart or some other organism?

In a start of Nobel-prize significance, scientists at Cambridge have pieced together every step in the development of the nematode from fertilization to maturity. The next target, to deter-mine the control mechanism that lies behind all this growth, has led to the investigation of gene expression. With the nematode, the issue of he, she or it adds an extra dimension to the study because, under some circumstances, the tiny worm is a self-fertilizing hermaphrodite

with males produced by the loss of one X chromasome. The detailed study of the cell-by-cell development of the worm led to an understanding of the construction and the function of te nervous system of this organism. The way that small groups of cells discover to which part of the body they belong is as important for understanding the develop-ment of humans as it is of humbler organisms.

Limiter is much the brightest near it on the 4th.

Jupiter is much the brightest object in the south-west until it sets at about midnight. Will be stationary on the 29th, and its east to west motion among the stars, which it has bad since May, will have a wife along the it on the Saturn should be visible in the western sky until about 21 h. Moon quite close to it on the 3rd, but the very close conjunction will not be until midnight.

Uranus and Neptune are evening objects setting before and soon after midnight respectively.

The Moon: first quarter, 4d03h; full, 11d16h; last quarter, 19d20h; new, 26d19h. Algol is becoming observable again. Its normal magnitude is 2.2 but only 3.2 at minimum. Approximate times of evening minima are just after midnight of the 9th-10th and 21h on the 12th. The orbit of the August meteors the Perseids, lies close to that of the Earth, though not in the same plane, and they travel in the opposite (retrograde) direction. Thus the encounter lasts for several weeks, from July 23 to August 20, and the radiant from which tye appear to diverge, as result of perspective, changes its position. At the expected maximum on the morning of the 12th it will be near the right-hand star of Perseus and the top star of Cassiopeia (right and top on the map). At the beginning of the period it was below that line and at the end will be above it. As he has been pointed out before, more meteors can be seen after midnight than before it, because the observer is then on the leading side of the moving Earth and meeting the meteoroids "bead Unfortunately this year the Moon is just past full on the date of maximum. Meteors are often associated with comers; the orbit of the Perseids is very similar to that od Comet Swift-Turtle, 1862 III. Almost imperceptably the days are shortening and the period of twilight all night has come to an end. At the middle of the month twilight will end at about 22h and begin again at about 02h.

For the last week of the month there will be no moonlight either in that dark period, and that will give an opportunity to admire the Milky Way when at its best. At this time of vear it is a great arc right across the heavens, from Sagitarius and Scorpius, through Cygnus and Cassiopeia, and reaching the northeast horizon just east of Capella. The widest and richest part is in Sagitharius, unfortunately very low in our lantude, and it is less pronounced in the Capella area. Soon after dark (July map)

Hercules is high just south of zenith. It is a kneeling figure which we see upside down, the star nearest to Ophiachus being the head.

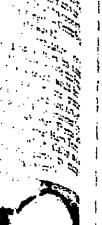

If you hold the map with north at the bottom you can imagine a figure kneeling on one knee. The inventors 2000 mass and stay it in the north.

3,000 years ago saw it to the north and upright because they were in a lower latitude then the UK and, because f precession, the constel-lation was further from the celestial equator than now.

The centre of the figure is a rough quadrilateral. If bimoculars are available examine the right-hand side of it (near the C of Corona) and see if you can gind the famous globular cluster M.13. It will be only a hazy spot, but when photographed with a large telescope it looks like a swarm of bees. It is about 27,000 light years away, contains more than 100,000 stars, and is probably 140 light years in dismester.

The key to American success on jobs

markets, through which people price themselves into jobs. According to his opponents, it lies in American federal government policy, which has increased the demand for the fruits of labour by spending much more than is raised in tax. The painful but clear lesson for Britain is that wage behaviour is vital to either

Since the low points of the output recession in the United States (late 1982), employment there has risen by nearly 7 million and unemployment has fallen from nearly 11 per cent to just over 7 per cent. Output began to creep back up in 1981, in Britain, but employment carried on falling for another two years. Despite a rise of nearly a quarter of a million since the spring of 1983, the total number of iobs here is still lower than it was at the bottom point of our output recession, and unemployment has risen with hardly a

At the same time, of course, the American federal budget deficit has risen, while Britain's has fallen though by less than intended. The impact of government sectors as a whole, (including state or local authorities) was not therefore as different as policy headlines might suggest. The crucial differences were America's ability to turn more of the nominal monetary increase in demand into real output gains; and to generate more jobs for each percentage increase in real output.

To both parts of this double miracle, wage behaviour was critical. Wage moderation has allowed the American boom to go on much stronger and longer without overheating into a cost explosion and credit crunch.

Negotiations with the car workers are giving the first sign of trouble ahead; but it is truly astonishing how cool the American labour markets have remained so far. Can anyone confidently assert that Britain would behave in the same way?

Now this, please note, is not to argue that umemployment or slow growth are essential to wage restraint in Britain. Unemployment has not worked as "Mrs Thatcher's pay policy": government strategy actually worked to push up real wages, and earnings are still running well ahead of inflation. But it is to argue that wage moderation in America has a great deal to do with it superior employment performance:

American wages rose much less than American prices during the United States recession - that is, "real wages" fell. And they have risen so little during the subsequent American boom that total "real labour costs" are, according to calculations by the London Business School, still about 7 per cent lower than in 1979. But real wages carried on up during Britaiu's recession. Today totally real labour costs are abour 8 per cent higher than in 1979, and still rising.

Britain's higher wage inflation not only makes it harder to imagine an inflationfree boom. Its important consequence is to make fewer jobs for a given rate of growth. This is because in Britain, though not in America, the price of labour has risen in relation to the price of machines.

The Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development recently calculated that between 1973 and 1981 the cost of labour in manufacturing rose 66 per cent, in relation to the cost of capital. in Britain: in the United States, the ration between the cost of labour and the cost of capital, in Britain; in the United Sates, the ratio between the cost of labour and the cost of capital was almost unchanged.

But to those of you who have patiently read us economic journalists prating for years of the virtues of higher productivity, the American comparison still contains a puzzle. Productivity has been lower in

How has America made jobs by the million while Britain has just made longer dole queues? According to Mr Nigel Lawson, the answer lies in flexible labour growth. Yet is not the high-wage, highgrowth. Yet is not the high-wage, high-productivity path the route to greater personal prosperity for those who have held on to their jobs. The trouble is that at least part of that apparent gain in productivity, and therefore of the real wage increases it has financed, has been generated by closing down the least productive parts of industry, a policy of claring Peter redundant to pay Paul. The effect is to raise the general level of wages in the economy in relation to the cost of capital, and so make it more difficult for new jobs to appear.

It is foolishly eary to blame the trade unions, who have after all only been fulfilling their bargaining role in a market economy, which does not provide for a national trade-off between pay and jobs. It is the behaviour of employers which is actually more puzzling.

Yet at a time of record unemployment, the British trade unions are spending time discussing the need for a national minimum wage, which would put further upward pressure on the British wage structure. It is worth dealing with a couple of their arguments, again by comparison with America, before drawing a few rather British conclusions.

The United States has, at least in theory, a national minimum wage, while Britain has only wages councils, covering at most 2.7 million people. Thus, it can be argued America's powerful employment performance has not been hindered by a statutory wage floor, and the same would

Not so. The American minimum wage has been declining in real terms - even faster, in fact than average wages. So a gap in the wage distribution has been opening up, into which American teenagers and women have been pouring by the million.

A pamphlet published today by the Institute of Economic Affairs, entitled Low pay - or no pay (IEA, £2.50), attempts to present the academic evidence from America of the damaging effect of a wage floor in Britain. Since it rather unhelpfully does not discuss recent American experience, it is worth looking at another just-published pamphlet -From the Dole Queue to the Sweatshop (Low Pay Unit, £1.00) - which attempts to establish the opposite and rather revea-lingly fails.

Mr Henry Neuberger, economic adviser to Mr Neil Kinnock, has run the idea of a modest minimum wage of only £80 a week through the public version of the Treasury's econometric model. This suggests that a minimum wage would increase unemployment. Mr Neuberger brushes this aside, arguing that the Treasury model overstates the effect. But why then did he use this model, rather than another which might more closely reflect his view of the economy?

But is it actually possible to prevent real wages rising in Britain? The attempt to do so was, of course, what led us down the path to statutory incomes policy. Two newer policies offer an oblique approach to the same problem. One is to explore further the ideas on offer for reducing the marginal cost of employing extra people

The other is to take the steam out of the minimin wage debate by dealing with low incomes in the proper way: by reforming the social security system to provide decent income support for the families of the low rold and integrating the new the low paid, and integrating the new system into computerized PAYE to remove the old stigma of the means test. These two approaches are not, in fact, miles apart from one another, and they begin to add up to the kind of labour market strategy the Government has sosingularly lacked.

Boeing's $1bn oil barter adds Three banks to pressure on prices

By David Young

The trade deal under which Saudi Arabia will buy 10 Rolls-Royce engined jumbo jets with payment in oil is now being seen as one of the main factors affecting world oil prices, and consequently the world value of sterling and gold.

The contract for 10 Beeing 747s and 40 Rolls-Royce RB-211 engines is worth almost $1 billion (£757m) and Boeing is being paid by the Saudi Arabian Government in oil. No cash is changing hands, Boeing is receiving $1 billion of oil.

International oil traders now believe that there are signs of the oil involved flowing through the world spot markets and adding to the present oversupply.

The official Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries' price of $29 and the official North Sea price of $30 are contract price this week. Prices for North Sea crudes are being kept at their official marker prices by the British National Oil Corporation, but

The Saudi oil has been passed on by Boeing to international oil dealers for trading in line used directly to pay for capital

However, the market is confused over which month's output this oil has come from -Saudi Arabia has a 5 million barrel a day Opec quots - or if it has been drawn partly from the stocks Saudi Arabia has built in tankers

Both Boeing and the Saudi Government are refusing to comment on the deal or on the valuation per barrel of the oil. ers in Rotterdam and New York feel that Saudi Arabia valued it at $29 a barrel, while it is now being sold on to customers at anything up to $5 a barrel less.

At last, a rumour we can confirm.

These past few months you've probably heard more about Continental than you'd care to know.

Now, we're happy to report, we have a plan designed to solve our problems in the best interest of everyone concerned.

The key provision of the plan is that Continental will continue to operate as a vital financial institution, free of the bulk of the problem loans which had become a burden on our financial and human resources.

We want to emphasise that, while the FDIC will have a strong investment position in the bank, Continental will be privately managed.

And we will be competitive.

The situation is complex. And so is the solution. It will take time. And it won't be easy. But with the continued support of our friends, employees and customers, it can be done.

We'll be telling you more about our plan in the weeks to come.

But right now, all of us at the bank would like to thank all of you who've given us your loyalty and encouragement. And assure you that we are committed to emerging a stronger and healthier Continental.

 Moorhouse and Croft go through

OLYMPIC GAMES 000

Twisting course for cross-country

Future boycotts to face IOC sanctions

TELETHON SIMON BARNES

Best seat in the house for grand opening

There are 8,000 journalists at the Olympic Games (not quite out numbering the 12,000 competitors), but not fill be covering the one of them will be covering the one of them will be covering fine Games as they are meant to be seen. I shall, I am guaranteed the best seat in the house at all events, trouble-free transition between all arenas, interviews with the top stars without breaking sweat, and, most important of all, the easiest access to an amending supply of cold beer throughout the Games.

For I am not among the 8,000 actually in Los Angeles. My chosen spot is elsewhere. I am not in the Olympic Village itself, but out in the border region where Barnet reaches north to join Potters Bar. I am watching the Olympics on television: first and foremost the modern Carnes are a valenties. modern Games are a television

Not only do I have a better Not only do I have a better vantage point than any of the heated and hassled $,000; unlike them, I am watching the real Olympics. I am not watching at second hand. I am watching the real thing: television. Just as I prefer to read Proust in English because I find he suffers so much in the he suffers so much in the original, so I am watching the Games on television because it would not be the same thing at Accordingly, I got into the groove for the fortnight-long marathon by watching the opening ceremony: the greatest show the producer of The Thorn Birds could devise. The 1,000-voice choir bellowed: "Wel-come"; David Coleman provided excellent teeth-gritting practice by talking about "the realities of life in 1984"; the 800-piece marching hand marched in curious formations; and 84 grand pianos added the Liberace touch so desirable on occasions like this.

The pre-match entertainment endeavoured to render the history of the United States in music, missing out the difficult bits like genocide, slavery and all that jazz.

All that was missing, in short, was Nadia Commerci leaping naked from a cake. The Romanians, defiers of the Soviet boycott, are destined to the acroes of the Games, and as the athletes marched past, the Africans in their robes, the Japanese in the boaters and the lone Burmese doubtless dream ing of Mandalay Beer, it was the Romanians who won a cheer almost loud enough to shake the cameras themselves.

There had been talk that Miss Comaneci might carry the torch into the stadium: what a nice exercise in political nosethumbing that would have been. Instead, in came the grand-daughter of Jesse Owens, an inspired choice, for what man in history has ever delivered a more perfect two-fingered salute from the athletes to the politicans of the world? The arena burst into the final movement from the Ninth Symphony and I reflected that one must not judge too harshly, that even in Los Angeles they have a sense of occasion; even here, a sense of grandeur.

Will Paish, admitted but Einoti himself denied, had contributed to his poor performance. But the principal reason was more likely to be his lack of racing at 800 metres - he had not run one in well over a month, after running practically two a week during the whole of the season last year.

It says much for the competition in Oslo that Elliott could still run a faster time in eighth place than Hillardt did in winning against Scott in Wahut last Wednesday. Given that he will undoubtedly employ his usual tearaway tactics, he should expect a victory to restore his morale since Scott and Hillands principally 1 500 and Hillardt, principally 1,500 metres runners, should not have his source of speed.

BBC chief raps Norman

The frastration of losing the exclusive contract for domestic afaletics overlage has empted into some extraordinary criticism of Andy Norman, the England team manager, by Bill Cotton, the managing director of BBC Television, (Pat Butcher writes).

for the athletics administrators, has suggested that the conporation's commentators were the reason why the contract was awarded to their conspections, FIV. Responding to the claim yesterday. Cotton accused Norman of being "not only ingracious, but naive".

In a statement issued from the BBC's Olympic base here in Los Angeles, Cotton also said: "It comes a bit ill from a full-time policeman, a part-time athletics official, to start telling us how to run the television coverage of a major sport. Mr Norman may be a negotiator, but he certainly is not an expert im our particular field. As far as I am concerned, athletics went to the highest bidder."

It transpires that, during nego-tiations, Jonathan Martin, the BBC's head of sport, was asked if he would be prepared to change commentators, a question he rebuffed. Norman's slight, that "their commentators had began to think they were bigger than the sport", seems to have been directed at Ron Picketing, who has been critical of the way British athletics is administered.

Since Norman, despite what seems to be only a miner post, is the most important man in athletics, not simply in Britain, but probably in the world, this is an extraordinary admission that he is not prepared to stand any criticism of his policies, which, none the less, have helped make Britain a major force in the new world of semi-professional athletics.

CHELMSFORD: Essex (4pts) beat Worcestershire by six wickets. Essex, the John Player League leaders, moved to their ninth success in a row with 14 balls to spare before an enraptured full house at Chelmsford yesterday, but not without a hiccup. That was when Gooch, Essex's hero earlier in the day, when he took four wickets for eight runs in 19 balls as Worcestershire were rounded up for 177 for nine, foundered, with Gladwin, after seven overs, with

Yet Pringle, who had been declared fit only at the eleventh hour yesterday, and McEwan combined to assure Essex victory in 127 in 26 overs, McEwan making 68

Surrey led Sri Lanks by 191 runs with six second, innings, wholers standing after the seconds days of their match at the Oval.

Surrey bowled the nouring team out for 194 and were 13% for four at A J Savent out of the close. In the opening period, Sri Lanks scored 95 runs for the loss of four wickets in 25 evers. But after the interval the county's bowling rate dropped to 10 overs in one hour.

The Sri Lankan captain, Duleep Mendis, took charge, hitting Taylor for 23 in one over on his way to an unbeaten 67 (two sixes and nine fours). The helmetless de Mel became yet another Sri Lankan casualty when he fell on to his wicket after being hit over the left eye by Thomas. De Mel is likely to be out for two days. be out for two days.

Alan Butcher, in the Surrey second innings, completed 1,000 runs for the season in a bright 49 (eight fours) as Surrey cruised to 135 for four in 38 overs by the close.

> this result was that four of the first five to finish were all home-bred. Teenoso, Sadler's Wells, Sun Princess and Time Charter all fall into this category, Tolomeo having been a remarkably cheap purchase when acquired for a mere 17,000 irish punts at Goffs as a yearling. No one can possibly gainsay the results achieved in Europe in the past two seasons by the big spenders at Keeneland, but the overall magnitude of the task confronting them can surely be compared with the parable about the rich man, the camel and the eye of the needle, as the finishes of last year's Diamond Stakes and Prix de L'Arc de Triomphe were simi-larly dominated by owners who race and breed their own stock. The only satisfactory aspect year-olds of high potential with victories in the Princess Margaret Stakes and Sandwich Stakes respectively by Tom Jones and Peter Walwyn, was the £200 fine inflicted on John Fellowes, the French trainer. Esprit du Nord was declared in blinkers but went to the start without them. New Zealand Great Britain ...

Auckland (Reuter) - The New Zealand Rugby league side over-came a first-half deficit to beat Great Britain 32-16 on Saturday and complete a clean sweep of the three-match series. Britain started with fire and skill, leading 10-8 at half-time from three penalties by Mick Burke and a try from Ellery Hanky. Ten minutes later Keith Mumby scored a try which Burke converted to increase the lead to

But New Zealand then rediscovered the power and cohesion which carried there to victories in the two previous Tests. James Luclual scored a try and the substitute, Clayton Friend, broke from the base of the scrum for a touchdown to put New Zealand ahead for the first time. The pair then sealed Britain's fate, Leuluai scoring his second try and Friend ..16 All four second-half tries were converted by Olsen Filipaina, who also scored two penalties in the first half. Dane O'Hara scored New Zealand's only first-half try. It was New Zealand's highest score against Britain and the first time they have won three consecutive Tests against Britain. Leuluai's tries took his personal tally to six in five

Only Attorney General can make such inquiries

Before Mr Justice Warner

[Judgment delivered July 20] On a motion by plaintiffs appointed by the Housing Corpor-ation to inquire into the affairs of a registered housing association for an registered notating association for an order requiring signed statements in regard to information sought by them Mr Justice Warner held in the Chancery Division that the action could be brought, if at all, only by the Attorney General on his own initialive or as a relator action. Mr E. G. Nugee, QC and Mr John Martin for the plaintiffs, Mr Isaac Jacob for the defendants.

MR JUSTICE WARNER said that the three plaintiffs had been appointed by the Housing Corporation under section 19(2) of the Housing Acr 1974, to inquire into the affairs of a registered housing association, the Auriol Housing The eight defendants included possibility of Aurio's officers or members of its management committee having interests or obligations conflicting with their duties to Auriol, and they had made attempts to obtain information from them as to that possibility. Those attempts met with no success recense, on counsel's advice, those contended that the questions put

by section 19(2):
The plaintiffs writ, issued on March 30, 1984, sought an order that each of the defendants provide a schedule of any companies in which during the last five years before the date of the order he had a shareholding, or of which he was a director, or in which he had any other financial interest, provided that in respect of such company within the said period "(i) a consultant, contractor, solicitor, auditor, or individual working for Auriol ... also worked for or provided services to the company, or (ii) a consultant, contractor, solicitor, suditor, or individual working...or providing services for Auriol or a committee member,

the information sought to private

Mr Jacob was unable to point to any issue of fact which could only be determined at trial, and in beence of any such issue his ordship thought that if the plaintiffs were entitled to the relief sought it ought to be granted to them on motion, so as not to hold the inquiry up any longer.

Mr Jacob contended that the plaintiffs were not entitled to relief against any of the defendants, (1) an action of this sort could be brought, if at all, only by the Amorney General, on his own

(2) the information sought was beyond that, to which they were entitled, because it was not confined to information relating to Auriol's to mormation relating to Author's business, and
(3) even if the plaintiffs had sufficient locus standi to bring the action, the court should, in exercise of its discretion, refuse the relief sought, parity because the questions would be oppressive, and parily because of inconsistencies between what the plaintiffs had told the defendants in correspondence and the evidence put in on their behalf.

After some hesitation his Lordship had come to the conclusion that Mr Jacob was entitled to succeed on his first ground, so that he need not and would not express any view on the others.

His Lordship referred to Lonrho Ltd - Shell Petroleum Co Ltd (No 2) ([1982] AC 173) where at p185. Lord Diplock referred to the presumption originally laid down in 1831 that "Where an Act creates an obligation, and enforces the per-formance in a specified manner-... that performance cannot be enforced in any other manner" - a statement frequently approved in the House of Lords.

Mr Nugee sought to rely on two classes of exception referred to by obligation imposed by section 19 (2) existed for the benefit of those appointed to conduct the inquiry, so that they had a correlative right which could be enforced by action in the civil courts, and the only

He alternatively submitted that the plaintiffs were within the spirit if not the letter of Mr Justice Buckley's statement in Boyce v Paddington Borough Council ([1903] 1 Cts 109) on the footing that the right correlative to the obligation imposed by section 19 (2) was a public right, and they, as the persons appointed to conduct the inquiry, had a special interest in

However, in his Lordship's opinion, the effect of the exceptions mentioned by Lord Diplock was to he public interest.

Mr Nugge relied on Chief Constable of Kent v V ([1983] Q B 34), as showing that there was no hard and fast rule that in the hard and last rule that in the absence of express enactment only the Attorney General might bring civil proceedings in aid of a public duty. His Lordship, having considered the Chief Constable of Kent's case explained in ([1984] 2 W L R 954), and also the Gouriet case, concluded that the plaintiffs right course, was to go to the Atto General, place before him the various considerations involved, and ask him either to bring for them to be brought as a relator action.

A bid for shares in a form which involved an arithmetical calculation of the price offered by reference to the bid of another ("a referential bid") was not invalid. The Court of Appeal in a reserved judgment allowed an appeal by Sir

Leonard Outerbridge from a decision of Mr Justice Peter Gibson ([1984] 2 WLR 884), whereby an order was made for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of shares between Harvela Investments Ltd and Royal Trust Co of Canada (CI) Ltd (Royal ersey). Their Lordships granted a decree of specific performance of a contract to sell the shares to Sir Leonard and an inquiry as to damages.

Mr Leolin Price, QC, and Mr
James Denniston for Sir Leonard; Mr Edward Nogee, QC, and Mr Oliver Weaver for Royal Jersey; Mr Michael Essayan, QC, and Mr Michael Driscoll for Harvela. LORD JUSTICE WALLER said that the shares were in a company called A Harvey and Co Ltd (Harveys). Approximately 43 per cent of the shares were held by Harvela and approximately 40 per cent by members of the Outerbridge family. The shares in issue represented approximately 12 per cent of the voting strength and were held by Royal Jersey.

If Harvela purchased the shares in issue the Harvey family would have the majority holding in harveys and if Sir Leonard purchased the shares the Outer-bridge family would have the majority holding. In response to an invitation from Royal Jersey, Harveta and Sir Leonard each made bids which, though similar in the size, were different in content.

Royal Jersey then decided that they should invite both Harvela and Sir Leonard to submit revised offers on identical terms and conditions They sent a telex to each of Harvela and Sir Leonard asking each to continue the existing offer to 3 pm continue the existing other to 3 pm on September 16, 1981, and containing the following terms. accordance with the terms of the invitation telex. On September 16, 1981 before 3 pm Harvela telexed to Royal Jersey a revised offer, that was in the sum of $2.175m. Also on September 16 before 3 pm Sir Leonard sent his written revised offer to Royal Jersey.

That offer, sent by his solicitors, was expressed as follows: "The amount of our client's tender is C$2,100,000 or C$101,000 in excess of any other offer which you may receive which is expressed as a fixed monetary amount, whichever is the Jersey were bound to accept.

Royal Jersey telexed each of Sir Leonard and Harvela giving the details of each bid, and concluded: "In the circumstances our clients are bound to accept and do hereby accept the offer received from Sir Leonard Outerbridge" and gave notice that they required the completed on October 15. Harvela, having thus been put on notice, started proceedings in Jersey but by agreement the present proceedings were started in the Chancery Division and the Jersey action was not proceeded with.

The judge gave judgment for Harvela deciding that they had made the highest bid. He came to that conclusion because he found that in contracts where sealed bids were made, a term had to be implied that referential bidding was not

The first question to consider was what was the proper construction to put upon the telex sent by Royal Jersey inviting Harvela and Sir Leonard to submit revised offers. In his Lordship's judgment the clause confirming that Royal Jersey bound themselves to accept the highest offer received by them made it clear that it was not a mere invitation to treat. It emphasized that if the offer complied with the terms of the telex Royal Jersey would accept the highest offer and therefore it was either an offer which when the highest bid was received completed a contract of sale or at least completed a contract to enter into a contract of sale. The next question was whether the bid of Sir Leonard was the highest bid or whether the referential part had to be rejected thereby making Harvela's bid the highest bid.

Wife's first remedy excludes second

Nurcombe v Nurcombe and Before Lord Justice Lawton, Lord Justice Browne-Wilkinson and Sir Denys Buckley

[Judgment delivered July 24] A former wife, who had obtained a lump sum payment in matrimonial proceeding on the basis that her former husband's assets included the profits of a lucrative property deal, was not able to bring a minority shareholder's action to recover, for a company of which she and the husband were shareholders, the profits of the deal which she alleged that the husband, in breach of his fiduciary duty as a director of the company, had diverted to another company in which he had a controlling interest.

The Court of Appeal dismissed the substantive appeal of the plaintiff, Mrs Miriam Evelyn Nurcombe, from the order of Mrs Justice Vinclott on May 25, 1983, who dismissed her action in which she claimed as a minority share-holder that the first defendant. Mr

LORD JUSTICE LAWTON said that during evidence in maximonial proceedings for financial provision, the plaintiff discovered that the defendant company had had a contractual right to purchase land at Pontypridd, that it had not done so and that another commany, in which bought part of the land and made a substantial profit as a result of a further sale.

By a reserved judgment in those proceedings the husband was ordered, inter alia, to pay the plaintiff a lump sum of £25,000. In assessing that sum the judge took into account the profit the husband had made from the Pontypridd

His Lordship was satisfied that by nolder that the first defendant, Mr.
Crawford Harvey Nurcombe, the time the evidence was control to look at the conduct of a plaintiff in amounty shareholder in and a director of the second defendant, had had enough information about order to satisfy itself that he was a Strict duty to ensure safety Briges, Amesco Ltd v Thurgood July 24 dismissing an appeal by the appellant company against the decision of Harfield Justices on July 18, 1983, when they found the company guilty of an offence contrary to section 155(2) of the Factories Act 1961 and fined it £50.

LORD JUSTICE STEPHEN BROWN said that the words reasonably practicable there was an "reasonably practicable" in the absolute duty to provide one or regulation qualified the standard more of the means specified in the Court (Lord Justice Stephen Brown and Mr Justice McNeill) so held on necessary to prevent a person falling fiduciary duty to the defendant company to its grave financial disadvantage. She was then able to make an election if the law required her to make one. In the common-law sense of

did not have to elect. In the matrimonial proceedings she was seeking to enforce for her own benefit rights she had as a wife. In the present action she was suing for the benefit of the company.

However, it was pertinent to remember that a minority share-holder's action in form was nothing: more than a procedural device for enabling the court to do justice to a company controlled by miscreant directors or shareholders.

Since that was so, whoever came forward to start the proceedings must be doing so for the benefit of the company.
His Lordship's understanding of Towers v African Tug Co ([1904] Ch 558) was that the court was entitled minority shareholder's misteasance action or she could proceed with her application for financial through the material in question, the regulation itself being a stantory requirement designed to ensure the safety of those working in conprovision in the matrimonial proceedings. She could not do what she had sought to do, that was,

s-contemplated therein. There was clearly a strict duty 10 make provision; although the degree might, well be qualified by the consideration as to whether it was reasonably practicable, there was an proper person to bring the action on behalf of the company and that the company itself would benefit. Applying those principles to the resent case, the plaintiff took her hance of persuading the court in a matrimonial proceedings that she should benefit from the ill-gotten gains which the husband had made. She succeeded and by the time the present action started had received two-thirds of the fruits of her victory.

When she received them she knew how the husband had got them and at whose expense - the Although I have shared my husband's ill-gotten gains I want the court to order that he should pay over to the company his share of them plus my share so that I can have a chance of getting some more The court should not countennce such conduct.

Lord Justice Browne-Wilkinson delivered a concurring judgment.
SIR DENYS BUCKLEY said that the circumstances were such that the plaintiff was confronted with two mutually exclusive course She could embark upon a ursue both.

In fact she elected to adopt the second alternative, and, in his Lordship's judgment, that election became binding on her at the latest when she accepted the first instalment of the lump sum. Solicitors: Clintons; Theodore Goddard & Co for Morgan, Bruce & a specimen of blood or a specimen confer on private persons, as such, rights to sue for their own benefit. Such rights belonged to the field of private law, whereas if the plaintiffs were entitled to enforce the obligation imposed by section 19 (2), it would not be because of any personal benefit or advantage that they might derive therefrom, but because, as the persons appointed to conduct the inquiry they were concerned to secure they were concerned to secur performance of those obligations in

So the question was whether that concern was sufficient to confer on them a right to sue in a civil court to enforce the obligations.

Mr Jacob submitted that it was not, because in the absence of express words, such as in section 222 of the Local Government Act 1972, only the Attorney General could take civil proceedings to enforce an obligation in the public interest, and he relied on Post Office Engineering Union v Gouriet ([1978] AC 435).

An ouster order requiring the shand to leave the matrimonual home was a very serious order which should be made only on the judge being satisfied that no lesser measure would be sufficient for the protection of the wife and children. The Court of Appeal (Lord Justice Oliver and Mr Justice Balcombe) on July 18 expressed its disquiet but refused an appeal by the busband from an order of Judge Hill Smith at Willeaden County Court on May 3, 1984.  In pleasing contrast to his controversial movie The Animal Film which forced many an "ugh!" out of us as we were reminded how beastly we can behave towards our furred and feathered friends, Victor Schonfeld's short film essay AND I DON'T HAVE TO DO THE DISHES (Channel 4, 6.00 pm) prompts an mahh" response as we learn how nicely some of us can behave towards our old folk. Ostansibly, Mr Schonfeld's new film is about some Schonfeld's new film is about some old age persioners anjoying a summar's week by the sea, thanks to a caring local authority. But anybody could have made a film like that. Mr Schonfeld's real purpose, cursingly understated, is to counterpoint sad reminders of mortality with a benevolent gesture aimed at making the elderty lorget how brief life's candle is. # Coalition rebels force recall of Bundestag

From Michael Binyon

The Bundestag is to be called logether for an emergency debate tomorrow and Chancelfor Helmut Kohl will have to break off his holiday in Austria to try to quell a coalition revolt over plans to allow a new coalfired power plant to operate without emission filters.

The Free Democrats, the junior partners in the Government, have sharply criticized the plans, announced last week by Herr Friedrich Zimmermann, the Interior Minister. The plans have also been attacked by the opposition Social Democrats and the Greens for environmental reasons. The Free Democrats' criticism has infuriated the Christian Democrats and led to new squabbling in the coalition.

The emergency debate indi-cates the depth of feeling over pollution in West Germany. The new plant, near the East be fitted with filters until 1987. Meanwhile it would deposit 125.000 tonnes of sulphur on the surrounding

Unions demand campaign to beat Thatcher

The strident political tone of the public debate on relations with the Government will be further heightened by a pro-posal from the left-wing technical and supervisory section of the Amalgamated Union of Engineering Workers, seeking to continue the TUC boycott of the National Economic Development Council.

TUC leaders cannot make up their minds whether 10 stay out of Neddy in protest at the forced deunionization of 7,000 workers at GCHQ, but the mood of militancy being whipped up over the labour laws – including the forth-coming 1984 Trade Union Act compelling unions to change their electoral practices - and the miners' strike could play into the hands of the militants.

Courtroom 22, on the fifth floor of the federal courthouse in Los Angeles, is the stage for the most absorbing of dramas. It is a large room with pale brown panelling, fawn carpet and beige seating.

It is Judge Robert Takasu gi's court. From boyhood the judge has had a passion for justice and the process of law, having himself experienced monstrous injustice. Like other Japanese Americans he and his family were sent to an internment camp in the Second-world war and his family was mined.

At 8.30am on this 77th day of the trial, the 55th day evidence, the judge slips into keeping with his wishes, no one rises. The court proceeds with its eviscertation of a former American business hero who made the big time and whose crash splattered the British Government.

Mr DeLorean sits in the well of the court, with his lawyers, at a large table heaped with documents. He wears a dark blue blazer, fawn trousers, a blue shirt and striped tie. He listens intently, makes notes, confers. Sometimes he looks at his wife, sitting near of their careers. Reputations ride on it. Defence and prosecution started off in gentlemanly accord. Now there is a rawness, an edge in their dealings.

Mr Howard Weitzman, Mr DeLorean's attorney, is bright-

John DeLorean looks up cycd, aggressive, a terrier Mr om his notepad and peers James Walsh, the prosecutor, is no less tough, and has a notable way with words 100. Both men are in their early forties and there is a sense of personal combat between

The witness sits to the judge's left and is cross-examined from a stand placed where the dock would be in a British court. The six men in the jury are mostly shirtsleeved, although one wears a blazer that would pass muster at Henley. The six women are in cool dresses. There are no uniformed policemen in the court, just a plainclothes security man. In front of the press benches six artists work with their pads and crayons, and one studies faces through opera glasses.

As Mr Walsh cross-examines, Mr Weitzman quietly interjects. "That question call for speculation," or "objection overruled". There is no dramatic leaping up, no roar of "objection". The dramas all the more tense for being reined in.

The session wears on People yawn, Mr DeLorcan blinks. His wife stretches her arms along the back of her bench, a reporter removes his shoes and wiggles his toes. At 1,30 pm the court rises for the day, the judge slips out. An artist leaves with sketches fora television news programme. Mr Weitzmann and his co-councel, Mr Donald Re, go to the press room to answer questions. Mr DeLorean sits there, clutching his briefcase. He looks drained. He has been advise by his lawyers to say nothing, and whil he is affavel enough, he obedientley com-plies. Christina, button-bright. smiling, chewing gum, sits at a reporter's desk during the news conference. The telephone rings, she answers and takes a message for the reporter.

Mr Weitzman goes downstairs to the steps of the courthouse and talks to the television cameras. The television companies have caravan-studios outside he court for the duration of the trial, The DeLoreans go home to their children. The trial started in March, it should be over by the end of August.

Nature notes

Some birds are still tending their young. On grassy heaths, meadow pipits make an insistent call like a cricket chirping, as they nestlings; a few females are still incubating a late clutch of chocolate-grey eggs. Around the Scottish coasts, eider-duck are swimming coasts, eider-duck are swimming with flotillas of ducklings: they make a noisy party, with the females continually grunting and growling, and the young piping shrilly. Puffins are feeding their solitary nestings, deep in sandy burrows; if the mouth of the burrow collapses, the adults whire the sand out in a brown cloud. Fulmar petrels also have a single chick in their cliffside nests. The parents fish out at sea, gliding on stiff wings, when they come back, the cliffs echo with murmurs and rattling cries from the nests.

Purple knapweed, and the nut-shaped yellow flowers of hop mefoil, are common in the long grass. Tufted vetch already has black seed-pods, which reveal a silver lining when they split. Spindle trees are showing small green seeds which look like four-pointed club-heads; whitish-green hazel nuts are fattening in their leafy sockets, but they will not be ripe for month or more.
